

FOREWORD

The publication of this volume marks something of a new departure for the Hansischer Geschichtsverein (Hanseatic History Association), founded in 1870 to promote scholarly research into the history of the German Hanse and its constituent towns, in particular by collecting and publishing the sources on the history of the Hanse and making them available to a larger public. Hitherto, however, the Association has only published customs accounts which have survived in the archives of towns which formerly belonged to the Hanse (Lübeck, Danzig etc.). Publishing a 'foreign' customs account might therefore be seen to exceed the Association's remit and to require some degree of justification.

However, the Hanse, which emerged in the 12th century from the informal and, as time went on, increasingly intense cooperation of towns bereft of royal protection and clinging to one another for security in a dangerous environment,¹ was never 'German' in the modern sense of the word. Indeed, the first known reference to the 'German Hanse' is in an English document (1282), and there was certainly no requirement that the merchants and towns which cooperated with one another under the aegis of the 'German Hanse' be ethnically German. Although the Diet decreed in 1366 that only full citizens of a Hanseatic town were allowed to enjoy Hanseatic rights, particularly overseas (a regulation the Kontore, particularly Bruges, did not accept), this was a far cry from restricting enjoyment of these privileges to ethnic (Low) Germans, although, as a rule, things worked out that way. However, the London Kontor counted among its members a number of merchants from Dinant, then as now a French-speaking town.

Furthermore, the Hanse's raison d'être was 'foreign' trade. Central to its commercial activities were the four overseas Kontore (London, Novgorod, Bruges, Bergen in Norway), which were flanked by numerous lesser settlements and trading posts reaching from present-day Portugal to Russia and Finland, from Scotland and Iceland to the upper reaches of the Vistula in Poland. Young boys were sent to the Kontore and trading posts to learn the local language, gain commercial experience and cultivate contacts with the local population.

Consequently, in the late medieval Hanseatic world, the line between 'domestic' and 'foreign' was much more blurred than it is today. Indeed, within the Hanse's trading area, it might be argued that it (almost) did not exist. Low German, the native language of most Hanseatic merchants, was the lingua franca of the Baltic and North Sea areas. In addition, it was not so far removed from the medieval forms of English and the Scandinavian languages that communication with the locals was particularly difficult, even without any linguistic training. In the 15th century, young men from Cologne seem to have picked up spoken and written English within a few weeks at the most. And Hanseatic merchants had been treated as free of London since the late 13th century, enjoying a higher status than non-Londoners. To put it another way, a young merchant from Hamburg or Danzig was – literally and figuratively – far less ‘foreign’ in London than a chapman from Norwich or York.

Therefore, nothing precludes the Association from following the merchants it studies wherever their overseas trade led them. Indeed, it would seem to be incumbent upon the Association to publish any and all customs accounts which throw light on their commercial activities, even if these records are ‘foreign’. This applies particularly to England, which was of abiding, indeed paramount importance to the Hanse, and most particularly to London, which in the 15th century was rapidly overshadowing all other English towns and achieving the mighty preeminence which it has never since relinquished.

This volume, covering the London customs accounts for 1445/46 and the sources relevant to the accounting of the customers at the Exchequer, is only the first of many volumes which the Association will publish.² For technical reasons, all following books are deemed to be sub-sections of volume 74 of the Association’s series Quellen und Darstellungen zur hansischen Geschichte (Sources and Monographs on Hanseatic History). For convenience, they are sub-divided into four series, one for each of the ruling dynasties: I: Plantagenet (c. 1280-1399), II: Lancaster (1399-1461), III: York (1461-85) and IV: Tudor (1485-c. 1550). Each series is divided into several parts (1, 2, 3 etc.). Thus, the first volume of the York series, covering the London customs accounts surviving from the first four regnal years of Edward IV, is designated as ‘vol. 74 III 1’, the first volume of the Tudor series, covering the accounts surviving from the first five regnal years of Henry VII, as ‘vol. 74 IV 1’ and so forth. In the end, all extant London customs accounts between 1280 and 1560 will be edited in their entirety.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

It is my great pleasure to thank all those who over the years patiently answered my many queries on such matters ranging from Latin palaeography to editorial technique and overall editorial strategy, in particular Amanda Bevan, Paul Brand, Margaret Condon, David Crook, Sean Cunningham, Christopher Dyer, Carolyn Fenwick, Evan Jones, Maryanne Kowaleski, Malcolm Mercer, Stephen O'Connor, Mark Ormrod, James Ross, Christopher Whittick and Margaret Yates. In addition, I am grateful to the Public Record Office (as it then was) for appointing me a temporary editor in the summers of 1992 to 1996. I hasten to add that I am equally indebted to the staff behind the counter in Chancery Lane and Kew, who repeatedly kept out my documents although I had forgotten to reserve them. In addition, I am obliged to the British Academy for a grant-in-aid for the completion of this volume.

The astute reader will have noticed that this volume is being published not by the British Academy in Oxford University Press, but by the Hanseatic History Association in Böhlau (Cologne). Taking over the task, Böhlau was understandably nervous about its legal position. As the quid pro quo for its quit-claim in respect of any rights it might have possessed in regard to the present volume, the British Academy required the following statement to be published verbatim.

This volume was originally (2008) accepted by the British Academy as Volume 45 in its Records of Social and Economic History, New Series, and accordingly announced as forthcoming by Oxford University Press and cited as such in the scholarly literature. It has subsequently been agreed by all parties that it would be more appropriate for the Hansischer Geschichtsverein to take over the publication. I am therefore doubly grateful to the Hansischer Geschichtsverein for agreeing to do this. The text published here is, barring the correction of minor errors and the odd update on the scholarly literature in the footnotes, identical to that submitted to the British Academy.

Finally, I am grateful to the Possehl Foundation (Lübeck) for its financial assistance in publishing this volume.

A GUIDE TO THE PERPLEXED¹

In the thirteenth century, the kings of England realized that a good deal of money could be made by imposing duties on merchants trading overseas.² Largely, if not universally, the monarch relied on locals to collect these duties, and in turn, required these customers to appear at the Exchequer and account for the income they had collected in his name. Of course, given the amount of money involved, the king didn't just take the customers' word for this. They had to prove that they had taken in every farthing the crown was owed, and they did so by drawing up customs accounts,³ listing all dutiable imports and exports ship by ship and merchant by merchant, with the duties charged entered into the right margin. Let's look at a typical entry.⁴

[3] Out of the ship of Lam van Passe called 'George of Antwerp' on the same day [27 Jan. 1446]

From Goyken van Lente for 500 lb. of hemp. Value 66s 8d.....customs 10d
From the said skipper for 60 measures of woad. Value 30s.....customs 4½d
From Henry Nase for 2 bales of Toulouse madder, 1 fat with 4 dozen knives, 6 dozen belts, 40 dozen shears and haberdashery of various kinds. Value £6 10scustoms 19½d

The Exchequer clerks worked through these accounts, checking the customers' calculations line by line – entering a dot over the customs charge if everything was correct and a cross in the left margin if there was any irregularity – and summing up the crown's income page by page. It must have been stultifying work, and it is difficult to avoid the conclusion that the customs accounts are among the most spectacularly dull administrative documents the English monarchy produced in the middle ages.

¹ If you have already worked with customs accounts, you should skip to the introduction.

² In the fifteenth century, the income from such duties formed a large part of the royal income: Stuart Jenks, 'Die Effizienz des englischen Exchequers zur Zeit des Hundertjährigen Krieges' Archiv für Diplomatik 33, 1987, p. 337.

However, it is precisely the mindnumbing detail which makes the medieval customs accounts so important. They put flesh on the bare bones of England's trade statistics.⁵ The enrolled account for 1445/46 tells us that foreign merchants imported and exported merchandise worth a total of £18,409 6s,⁶ but only the customs account tells us about the ship of Lam van Passe and the details of the merchandise Goyken van Lent, Lam van Passe, Henry Nase and all the others shipped in and out of London in 1445/46. With the information the customs accounts provide on shipping, merchants and merchandise, economic historians can ask all sorts of questions. Since foreign trade was largely, if not wholly the province of wealthy merchants who left their footprints all over the urban and national records, particularly because they governed the towns in England and abroad, one can trace the careers of individual merchants, follow the trade of groups of merchants, be they members of one London company like the mercers, citizens of one town like Bristol or foreign nationals like Hansards or Florentines, Genoese and Venetians. In much the same way, the information in the customs accounts on products and prices allows one to focus on one product or another, be it the English cloth, salt, furs and so forth, asking who controlled the trade, how trade volume and prices developed and so forth. Finally, the information the customs accounts provide on shipping can be analyzed to uncover shipping routes and the range as well as the patterns of shipping (in convoy or alone, seasonal variations). One can also characterize individual skippers' mode of operation (plying a regular route or trying one's luck as a tramp steamer) and even piece together a biography or two.⁷

As important as the customs accounts are, they are a comparatively recent addition to the historian's arsenal of sources. They were rediscovered not quite a hundred years ago, in 1911,⁸ and not much was made of them before Gras stumbled across them quite fortuitously when investigating the English corn trade.⁹ In the 1920s, a group of scholars working under the direction of Eileen Power at the London School of Economics studied them intensely, in the hope of demonstrating their value as evidence. Whether the customs accounts recorded real ships, real merchants and the goods they in fact shipped was open to doubt, since one of the group, Eleanor Carus Wilson, was rightly sceptical about another class of royal records, the aulnage accounts.¹⁰ The fruit of their labours was a seminal volume of essays, published in 1933, entitled Studies in English Trade in the Fifteenth Century,¹¹ which marked out the lines of inquiry which have been followed ever since. Five of the seven articles utilized the customs accounts to great effect to discuss trade, and each of them was followed by a host of similar enquiries.

Eileen Power's analysis of the wool trade (p. 39-90) not only spawned a much more detailed study of English wool exports,¹² but also other studies of individual products like salt,¹³ furs,¹⁴ wine¹⁵ and lead,¹⁶ all of which made meticulous and systematic use of the customs accounts to ask who was involved in trading a particular product, what different types of wool, salt, furs etc. were traded, the bottoms in which they were shipped (occasionally also the sailing season), prices, the total value or volume of the trade and the share the English and their foreign competitors had in the trade in question.

trading with England, namely the inhabitants of the Low Countries,¹⁸ Castilians,¹⁹ Irish,²⁰ Portuguese,²¹ Norwegians²² and Italians.²³ The salient feature of these works is that their authors have systematically tracked down every relevant foreigner in the customs accounts and have used them to build up a typology of the merchandise which was traded back and forth. Some, too, have used the customs accounts to analyze shipping, detailing the provenience of the vessels, their routes and seasonal variations in shipping.

Carus Wilson's article on the English trade with Iceland (p. 155-82) inspired analyses of English trade with Castile²⁴ and the Mediterranean,²⁵ while the immense literature on the merchant adventurers²⁶ and the English trading companies of the sixteenth century²⁷ lies beyond the scope of this essay.

and York, Beverley and Hull.³⁰ In addition, these articles inspired an interest in the foreign trade of the members of the greater London companies such as the mercers³¹ and grocers.³² Common to all these studies is that the authors have trawled through the customs accounts, looking for the members of the group on which their studies are focussed and identifying the products they imported and exported. This, in turn, prompted them to determine the relative weight of individual merchants within the group and of the entire group in relation to its competitors.

If this survey has conveyed the impression that no stone has been left unturned, that would be false. While much remains to be discovered, it must be emphasized that it is essential to understand the customs accounts in the proper context. They are fiscal documents, forming one part of the procedure imposed on the customers when accounting for the crown's customs income before the Exchequer. That is the reason why all the other accounting documents relating to the London accounts for 1445/46 are published in this edition. More importantly, it is the reason for the highly technical introduction to the volume, which explains the customs system and the Exchequer's accounting procedures.

INTRODUCTION

An edition of the London customs accounts in the late middle ages does not really need any justification at all. After all, London was the economic centre of England during this period and generated – together with its satellite harbours Ipswich, Colchester, Sandwich and Dover – the vast bulk of the nation's trade turnover. Put very simply, London's trade is in large measure England's trade. In addition, given London's central position in international trade – a phenomenon which can be measured by the prominence of merchants from Italy, the Low Countries and the Hanse – any major development in European trade would be bound to be reflected in London. Since the customs accounts are our prime source for all these momentous regional, national and international changes, editing and publishing them must be a scholarly endeavour of central importance. Moreover, the London accounts are visibly deteriorating due to heavy use. Therefore, it is of paramount importance to transcribe every legible entry of every account, even if it is in parlous shape, before it becomes even more illegible.

This volume is part of a project which covers the period from 1280 to 1560. These years witnessed a number of pan-European economic upheavals which cannot but have left traces in London's trade. The two great bullion famines (1390-1420 and 1440-1460)¹ and the establishment of the Portuguese spice trade in Antwerp (1501/08) following the circumnavigation of Africa in 1498² – a development which pulled the rug out from under Venice's trade – both fall within the project's time frame. The entire edition of the London customs accounts will thus provide a unique opportunity to investigate the effects of these European developments on London's trade.

As important as illustrating the history of London's trade in this crucial period is, it is not the sole purpose of this edition. In my view, it is equally important to recognize that the customs accounts constituted the basis of the accounting of the customers at the Exchequer and that these accounting procedures are uncharted territory. Our knowledge of the most advanced financial administration in medieval Europe is based largely, if not wholly, on the analysis of the Exchequer reform ordinances (1323/26) and the reforms of the 1550s and 1560s.³ As far as I am aware, no one has yet undertaken an empirical analysis of the accounting procedures actually utilized by the Exchequer in the later middle ages.⁴ Consequently, it is the purpose of this volume to show how the accounting system of the Exchequer worked in practice, by publishing all documents relating to the accounting of the London customers at the Exchequer in 24 Henry VI (1445/46).⁵

THE ENGLISH CUSTOMS SYSTEM

Understanding the Exchequer's accounting procedures requires a preliminary description of the English customs system in the late middle ages. During our period, there were 16 customs districts, which were understood to be the stretch of coast between two towns (Map 1). In the case of London, the limits of the customs district were marked by Tilbury (Essex) in the north and Gravesend (Kent) in the south.

Map 1: English customs districts

⁴ Roger Schofield, Taxation under the early Tudors 1485-1547, Oxford 2004, p. 140-67 undertakes just such an empirical investigation regarding the Exchequer accounting procedures obtaining for collectors of parliamentary subsidies.

⁵ The remaining customs accounts (for the period 1390 to 1560) and accounting documents (for the period 1390 to 1460) will be published in digital form on the Hanseatic History Association's website.

All imports and exports were subject to duties, with the following exceptions:

- Coastal, i.e. internal trade was duty-free.⁶
- Goods not intended for trade were exempt.
- Mariners were entitled to import and export small amounts of merchandise (known as ‘freeboard’).⁷

The duties fell into one of two distinct categories, namely customs and subsidies. From 1353, subsidies – originally extraordinary, emergency aids to the crown, but by 1390 continuously collected – had three characteristics:

- They had to be approved by parliament.
- Parliament set a time limit for the collection of a particular subsidy, after which the grant lapsed.
- Parliament set the rates of the subsidy for the period in which it would be collected.

Customs differed from subsidies in all three characteristics.

- The crown collected them by its own right.
- They were not time-limited.
- The customs rates were unchangeable.

For the sake of convenience, the various customs and subsidies were drawn together. First of all, the customs and subsidies on wool, woolfells and hides (designated collectively as ‘staple merchandise’), which formed the bulk of the crown’s customs income, were amalgamated (Table 1). The wool subsidy had been granted at 33s 4d/sack (indigenous) and 53s 4d/sack (aliens) for the period from 11 November 1443 to 11 November 1445 by parliament⁸ and was extended by the following parliament at the same rates until 11 November 1449.⁹ Despite the parliamentary grant, the king reduced the alien rates to 43s 4d/sack or 240 woolfells by a royal mandate under the privy seal to the Exchequer dated 14 July 1442,¹⁰ but only for Italian merchants.

Table 1: Wool customs and subsidy rates in 1445/46

Customs	Indigenous	Aliens
Wool (per sack of 364 lb.)	6s 8d	10s
Woolfells (per 240 fells)	6s 8d	10s
Hides (per last of 200 hides)	13s 4d	20s

⁶ Trade with Gascony and Normandy, under crown rule in 1445/46, was dutiable.

The subsidies – tunnage and poundage – had been granted by parliament for the period from 1 April 1443 to 1 April 1445¹⁵ and extended by parliament from 2 April 1445 to 2 April 1449¹⁶ at the same rates (Table 3). Although tunnage and poundage were payable by indigenous and alien merchants alike, there were exceptions for certain kinds of merchandise and certain merchant groups. First, all imports of fresh fish and wine were exempt from poundage – the latter being covered by tunnage – as were all exports of grain, staple mer-

Second, Hanseatic merchants were exempt from all subsidies, including tannage and poundage, by virtue of the Treaty of London (22 March 1437).¹⁸ Third, the grant of tannage and poundage which took effect on 1 April 1437 exempted indigenous merchants from payment of poundage on their cloth exports.¹⁹ Finally, alien imports of sweet Mediterranean wines had been subject to double tannage since 1431.²⁰

Until the last quarter of the fifteenth century, the customs administration in any given district was comprised of four officials. First and foremost were the two customers themselves, who were required to collect the customs and issue the corresponding receipts (cockets) and to account before the Exchequer for all customs income and expenditures at the behest of the crown. In theory, the customers were not permitted to issue customs receipts alone, but only together with the controller, since the cocket was not valid if it was not sealed twice: on the obverse by the customers and on the reverse by the controller.²² Clearly, any attempt to add the missing seal subsequently would damage the first seal, so that customers and controller were – in theory – forced to issue the cocket together and record the corresponding imports and exports identically.²³ Finally, the fourth official, the searcher, was responsible for seizing smuggled goods and English currency, which it was illegal to export. The searcher, too, was required to account before the Exchequer for seized currency and the proceeds from the auction of smuggled merchandise.

Before appearing before the Exchequer, the customers drew up an account which listed 1) the ships which had entered or left harbour in the entire customs district with dutiable goods on board, 2) the merchants who owned the goods in question, 3) the value (or amount) of customable goods and 4) the customs or subsidy charge they had incurred. At the same time, the controller drew up a controlment roll, which included all information in the customs accounts with the exception of the charges on the merchandise in question. The difference between these two documents may be illustrated by an example, the first entry from the petty customs account and controlment roll for 24 Henry VI (Table 4).

Table 4: Customs account and controlment roll (Petty Customs, 24 Henry VI)

The purpose of the controlment roll was, of course, comparison with the customs account in order to ferret out omissions and irregularities. If one roll omitted a ship or a merchant or recorded a differing total value (or amount) for a merchant's goods, then the customers would be called upon to explain the discrepancy. However, it did not excite suspicion if the two rolls listed the ships entering or leaving harbour on a given day, or indeed the merchants and their products in a different order. In fact, discrepancies of this sort are rather common. They occurred because the customers first recorded imports and exports on tiny strips of paper, as these goods entered or left the port in lighters (Illustration 2).

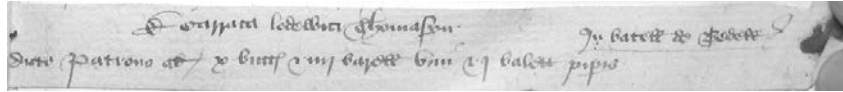

Illustration 2: Customers' first recording of imports (TNA, PRO, E122/161/7/7, probably Southampton, undated)

De carraca Lodewici Thomasyn — In batella de Bedelle

[De] dicto patrono, alienigena, [pro] 10 buttes et 4 barellis vini et 1 balett piperis [seal in red wax]

Since merchants tended to distribute their goods amongst a number of ships in order to spread risk, but wanted to be presented with a single bill for customs or subsidy payments on a given day, the customers first alphabetized these strips of paper by the name of the merchants and then produced the cockets. Consequently, the dates of entry and exit recorded in the customs accounts and controlment rolls always reflect the day on which the cocket was issued, which was not necessarily the same as the ship's date of entry or exit from harbour. Then, in order to produce the customs account, the customers classified the strips by date and ship. Since the controller worked in the same way, it is not surprising that the order of ships whose cockets were issued on a given day might vary between customs account and controlment roll, and the same is true of the order of merchants in a given ship. While, as noted above, discrepancies of this sort did not disturb the Exchequer, its officials did tend – if things got a bit confusing – to mark up the customs accounts, entering a dot in the left-hand margin for each merchant who was also recorded in the controlment roll and another dot above the total value or amount of goods, indicating agreement with the corresponding information in the controlment roll. It was then a very simple task to scan down both margins and spot omissions and discrepancies: if a dot was missing, then there was a problem.

In all customs districts other than London, one unified customs administration, consisting of the two customers and the controller, collected and accounted for wool customs and subsidy, petty customs and tunnage and poundage in a single account.²⁴ However, in view of the huge turnover in the London customs district, it made sense to appoint three separate groups, responsible for one of the three types of duties respectively. Table 5 shows the personnel of the customs administration in London in 1445/46.

Since London's trade was recorded by three separate groups of customers and controllers, it follows that no one account contains all information on London's trade in its entirety. Staple merchandise was not recorded in the petty customs and tunnage and poundage accounts, and indigenous cloth exports and all Hanseatic imports and exports were omitted in the tunnage and poundage account, whilst appearing in the petty customs account. A complete picture of London's trade can therefore only be pieced together when all three types of customs accounts (or their controlment rolls) are transmitted: wool customs and subsidy, tunnage and poundage, petty customs. Since the year 24 Henry VI (1445/46) is the first year within the period from 1390 to 1530 in which all three types of customs accounts are transmitted in fairly full form, its accounts were chosen for publication in this volume: a complete controlment roll for wool customs and subsidy (29 September 1445 to 29 September 1446), a complete customs account and controlment roll for petty customs (for the period from 26 January to 29 September 1446) and the first 24 folios of the tunnage and poundage account, containing imports from 29 September to 14 December 1445.

THE ACCOUNTING OF THE CUSTOMERS AT THE EXCHEQUER

Before entering into a detailed examination of the Exchequer's accounting practices, it is important to say a few words about methodology. Starting in 1392/93, I proceeded in ten year steps to 1462/63, examining all accounting materials of the English customers³² in all relevant document classes in the Public Record Office (TNA)³³ for the year in question. There seemed little point in extending the investigation to the period prior to 1392/93, since very few accounting documents were enrolled before that year. Ending the investigation in 1462/63 suggested itself because after that year very few issue rolls (TNA: PRO, E403) are transmitted. For the period 3 Edward IV (1463/64) to 19 Edward IV (1479/80) only around a third survive³⁴ and the series ceases altogether in 1480/81.³⁵ Since the issue rolls are the only source for the fees and rewards of the customers and controllers, it seemed best to limit the investigation to the period in which they are transmitted without gaps.

The accounting periods of the customers were generally determined by the rhythm of the Exchequer year, which ran from Michaelmas to Michaelmas, exceptions being made if a customer died,³⁶ resigned from office or was replaced. At the end of an accounting period, the customers wrote out a fair copy of the customs account and attached to it the parcelle compoti,³⁷ comprising the patent letter by which they had been appointed (omitted if they were to continue in office), all royal mandates for payment upon which they had acted, receipts of beneficiaries and so forth. They placed these documents in a parchment bag,³⁸ together with the tallies which had been presented to them by the recipients of crown payments and the controlment roll. With that, they travelled to Westminster to account.

The King's Remembrancer was responsible for summoning the customers and the controller to the Exchequer at the end of an accounting period. Accordingly, he kept track of who was accountable and who had accounted in his Memoranda Roll. How this was done can be seen if we look at a typical entry, Exchequer Writs: Original Series (E202) and the accounting materials in the Customs Accounts (E122) when relevant.

³⁴ Easter term rolls have survived for 3, 4, 6-9, 11 and 18-19 Edw. IV. Michaelmas rolls have survived for 6-8 Edw. IV and 18 Edw. IV.

³⁵ Issue rolls continued to be produced until 1514, but they have not survived: see J.D. Alsop, 'The Exchequer in late medieval government, c 1485-1530', J.G. Rowe (ed.), Aspects of Late Medieval Government and Society. Essays presented to J.R. Lander, Toronto 1986, p. 179-212, here p. 188 and Schofield, Taxation, p. 263 n. 15.

³⁶ In this case, of course, the customer's executors accounted.

dating from Hilary term 1433.

Suff Memorandum, quod Johannes Godestone et Johannes Hunt collectores custume lanarum, coriorum et pellium lanutarum ac parve custume nostre necnon subsidii lanarum et pellium lanutarum ac subsidii tonagii et pondagii in portu ville Gippewici venerunt et computarunt a 14 die Marcii anno regni regis Henrici VI decimo [14 March 1432] usque ad festum sancti Michaelis proximum sequens [29 September 1432]. It will be observed that the summoning of the customers to account was generated by the memorandum on the accounting of their predecessors in office. In continuation of this memorandum, the King's Remembrancer noted who the accountants' successors in office were and the fact that these were now obliged to account (computaturi). At a later point in time – and in another scribal hand – the entry notes that the present customers and the controller are to be summoned by a distringas writ to appear on a particular return day, here from 20 April 1433,⁴⁰ in order to account. When the writ was dispatched, an 's' was entered in the margin of the entry, so that it was simple to scan down the membrane and see which officers had been summoned and which not.

Distringas writs were returnable: The sheriff was required to enter onto the dorse of the writ (a) the names of the sureties the customers had found in order to ensure that they would appear as summoned and (b) the annual income (exitus) of the customers' real property in the county.⁴¹ As soon as the endorsed writ was returned, the King's Remembrancer looked up the corresponding entry in his Memoranda Roll⁴² and entered a large, long-tailed 'r' over the 's', showing that the summons (s) had been returned (r), as illustrated by the summons to William Beaufitz and Richard Bulstrode to account for the issues of tunnage and poundage in London on 29 Apr. 1454 (Illustration 3).

⁴⁰ The return day was named as crastinum Clausi Pasche, which fell on 20 April 1433.

⁴¹ In the case of the Southampton customers Thomas Coke and Thomas Ponde, the sheriff endorsed the writ as follows: *Mauricius Berkeley armiger vicecomes. Manucaptores Thome Ponde infrascripti: Willelmus Smythe, Rogerus West, Robertus Suthie, Ricardus Manne. Exitus terrarum 12d. Thomas Coke infrascriptus nulla habet terras neque tenementa, bona sive catalla in balliva mea, per que distringi potest. Note that the exitus terrarum was net of all reprises, reparaciones et onera inde exeuncia: TNA: PRO, E159/240 fines ... et visus Michaelmas m 6d.*

⁴² Note that, often enough, the reference to the Memoranda Roll was entered at the foot of the writ, as the example in n. 45 shows.

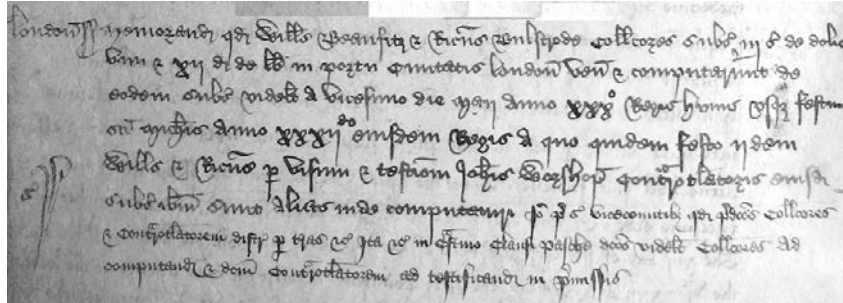

Illustration 3: Summons (s) and return (long-tailed r) of a distringas writ, as noted in the left hand margin⁴³

Note that the sheriff had to distrain the customers' real property and chattels, ascertain the annual revenue of their real property in the county and return the writ by the return day, at which he had to produce the customers and the controller in the Exchequer.

Needless to say, problems occasionally cropped up. In the first place, the sheriff might not be able to find the customers and the controller. Moreover, they might not have any real property or chattels in the county which could be distrained. In this case the sheriff entered the appropriate memoranda (N.N. non est inventus in balliva mea; N.N. nulla habet terras neque tenementa, bona sive catalla in ballia mea, per que distringi potest) on the dorse of the writ and returned it into the Exchequer.⁴⁴ If the sheriff failed to return the writ at all, the King's Remembrancer noted vicecomes non retornavit breve in the corresponding entry. Finally, it was far from seldom that – although the customers and the controller had been distrained – they simply did not turn up on the day. This caused the King's Remembrancer to note vocati non venerunt in their entry in the Memoranda Roll.

If – for whatever reason – a customer did not appear on the day given to him, the sicut alias writ of distraint was issued for the next Exchequer term.⁴⁵

⁴⁵ There were three stages within the distraint writ procedure. The second and third were distinguished from the first solely by the inclusion of the words sicut alias and

If he once again failed to appear, a sicut pluries writ was issued for the following term. If the customer still did not turn up, the Exchequer issued an attachias per corpus writ, directing the sheriff to produce the customer, and his goods and chattels were seized into the king's hand by virtue of the writ of distraint.⁴⁶ On the basis of a writ of attachment the sheriff would normally take sicut pluries after the command to the the sheriff (Precipimus tibi). Take, for instance, the sicut alias writ of distraint directed to the Southampton customers Thomas Coke and Thomas Pounce on 12 Apr. 1457 summoning them to account the return day starting on 27 June 1457 (TNA: PRO, E202/138 unnumbered): Henricus Dei gracia rex Anglie et Francie et dominus Hibernie vicecomiti Suthamptonie salutem. Precipimus tibi sicut alias, quod non omittas propter aliquam libertatem, quin eam ingrediaris et dstringas Thomam Coke et Thomam Pounce collectores custume lanarum, coriorum et pellium lanutarum ac parve custume nostre necnon subsidii lanarum et pellium lanutarum ac subsidii tonagii et pondagii in portu ville Suthamptonie per omnes terras et catalla sua in balliva tua, ita quod nec ipsi nec aliquis per ipsos ad ea manum apponeret, donec aliud inde tibi precipimus, et quod de exitibus earundem terrarum nobis respondeas et quod habeas corpora eorum coram baronibus de scaccario nostro apud Westmonasterium a die sancte Trinitatis in 15 dies [27 June 1457] ad reddendum nobis comptum de custumis et subsidiis predictis de tempore, quo fuerunt collectores ibidem et non computarunt. Et versus Willelmum Stone contrarotulatore eorundem custumarum et subsidiorum ibidem fit executio per aliud breve directum vicecomiti ville Suthamptonie. Essex. Note that Peter Arderne – who attested the writ – was the Chief Baron of the Exchequer and William Essex King's Remembrancer. This sicut alias writ was not recorded in the King's Remembrancer's Memoranda Roll. Rather, the cross reference to TNA: PRO, E159/232 Recorda Michaelmas m 23d leads one to the venerunt et computarunt entry for Coke and Pounce's predecessors in office, at the end of which the usual entry was made indicating that Coke and Pounce were now due to account, which in turn generated the first writ of distraint, as indicated by the 's' and 'r' in the margin.

⁴⁶ This was the case with the Newcastle customers Thomas Bee and Alan Bird, who although pluries districti per terras et catalla sua de veniendo hic ad plures dies preteritos et tandem ad crastinum sancti Michaelis supradictum [30 Sept. 1454] ad reddendum ... comptum, had per hujusmodi districciones seu exitus terrarum suarum forisfacturam justiciari non permiserunt, set reddicionem ejusdem compoti diffuere nituntur, in quantum potuerunt, in contemptum dicti domini regis ac compoti predicti retardacionem manifestum. Therefore, the Exchequer ordered them to be attached per corpora sua to respond to the king for the contempt as well as to account. Furthermore, the Exchequer directed the sheriff to seize all their goods and chattels lands and tenements into the king's hand nomine districcionis: (TNA: PRO, E159/230 fines ... visus Michaelmas, unnumbered: http://aalt.law.uh.edu/AALT2/H6/E159no230/aE159no230fronts/IMG_0852.htm). The form of the attachias writ is: Henricus etc. vicecomiti Suthamptonie salutem. Precipimus tibi sicut pluries, quod non omittas propter aliquam libertatem, quin eam ingrediaris et attachies N.N., ubicumque eum invenieris in balliva tua, et eum salvo et secure custodias, ita quod eum habeas coram baronibus de scaccario nostro apud Westmonasterium a die Pasche in 15 dies ad respondendum nobis de [here followed the type of account to be rendered] et ad ulterius re- sureties from the customer for this appearance, but also had the option of taking him into custody. If the customer appeared after the issuance of the attachias writ, he was normally imprisoned in Fleet prison until such time as he requested permission from the Exchequer to make a fine with the crown pro contemptu regis. However, lest the accounting procedure be delayed unduly, the Exchequer normally granted permission to find bailees⁴⁷ who had to guarantee that the customer would appear for all further stages of the accounting process and until he agreed a fine with the king.

The Exchequer seldom was forced to take such measures. The vast majority of customers and controllers appeared as directed in the first distringas writ, and of the few who failed to show up three or more times in a row, most were persuaded to appear in Westminster by the first attachias writ. Nonetheless, if a customer was not moved by these measures, then the Exchequer had no other option than to attach him sicut alias, and then sicut pluries term for term ad infinitum.⁴⁸ One Newcastle customer proved particularly recalcitrant. According to the sheriff's returns, Thomas Bee could not be found between 30 September 1454 and 14 October 1458. Furthermore, he had no distrainable property in the county. A total of fifteen attachias writs were sent and duly returned by the sheriff, endorsed each time with non est inventus and nulla habet bona. Finally, in Michaelmas term 1458, the Exchequer learned that Thomas Bee had died in the meantime,⁴⁹ which of course meant that there was little to be gained by dispatching further writs northwards. However, the fact that – for fifteen entire terms – the sheriff maintained that he did not have the slightest inkling of where to find Thomas Bee, but then, after almost four years, suddenly knew for certain that he was no longer amongst the living, strains the imagination. Surely, there must have been some sort of collusion. In such cases, the Exchequer was powerless.

*cupiendum in premissis, quod curia nostra duxerit ordinandum. Et habeas ibi tunc hoc breve. Teste P. Arderne apud Westmonasterium, 12 die Februarii anno regni nostri 34. The form of the sheriff's response on the dorse of an attachias writ is identical to that on the dorse of a distringas writ.*

⁴⁷ For instance, when Alan Byrd finally appeared, he was incarcerated in Fleet prison. The rhythm of the summoning of the customers to account was determined by the sessions of the Exchequer, which normally sat from 30 September (crastinum Michaelis) to shortly before Christmas (Michaelmas term), from the day after Hilary (14 January) to the beginning of Lent (Hilary term), from the Monday after the Sunday after Easter (Quasimodo geniti) until shortly before Pentecost (Easter term) and from the Monday after Trinity Sunday until around mid-July (Trinity term). While the beginnings of the Exchequer terms were fixed, the length of the sessions could vary, depending on how much work had to be done.⁵⁰ Fundamentally, the summons were issued at the end of one term for the beginning of the next, for instance at the beginning of Lent for the first day of Easter term (crastinum Clausi Pasche). If further summons proved necessary – because the sheriff had not returned the writ or the customers had not appeared – the customers were summoned for the beginning of the next term (crastinum Michaelis, crastinum Hillarii etc.). Even if the customers had appeared at the beginning of term as directed and begun to account, they normally had to be summoned repeatedly, as it was normally impossible to complete accounting on one return day. In this case, the Exchequer tended to stipulate the third week of term (quindena Michaelis etc.). However, this was not a hard and fast rule: later return days – in the fourth, fifth or even sixth week of term – were not unheard of.⁵¹ All in all, it is clear that the Exchequer did not allow itself to be locked into a rigid schedule when summoning the customers, and all rules deduced from the practical, day-to-day workings of the fifteenth century Exchequer can only be considered rough-and-ready guides. Nonetheless, it is clear that the Exchequer tended to summon the customers for the first return day of term and to schedule follow-up sessions for mid-term.

In the late fourteenth century, the Exchequer customarily summoned the customers to account about a year after the end of the accounting period of their predecessors in office. Since most customs accounts ran from Michaelmas to Michaelmas, customers were normally summoned before the Exchequer on the first day of Michaelmas term,⁵² which fell immediately after the final day of the customs account.⁵³ However, there were exceptions, notably for customs accounts which – measured from the date on which the writ of distraint was dispatched – either had run for over a year (in these cases the customers were summoned on very short notice) or for much less than a year (in these cases the customers were given more time). In any event, it is clear that the Exchequer tended to let the accounts run for a year and only then to summon the customers to account.

⁵⁰ See Appendix IV: Exchequer terms.

⁵² This was the case in 19 of 29 accounts in 1392/93, in 14 of 26 accounts in 1393/94 and in 14 of 23 accounts in 1403/04.

THE VISUS COMPOTI

This did not mean that the Exchequer turned a blind eye to the customers' activities in the meantime, since the crown was chronically far too short of cash to do so. The issue rolls (TNA: PRO, E403) contain a number of entries for the expenses of messengers sent to summon the customers to Westminster for preliminary accounting. On 6 March 1383, for instance, the customers of Hull, Boston, Lynn, Yarmouth, Ipswich, Sandwich and Southampton were ordered in the middle of their (respective) accounting periods de essendo coram domino thesaurario et baronibus de scaccario in crastino Clausi Pasche proximo futuro pro certis negociis regis.⁵⁴ Even more common were payments to the tellers of the Exchequer who – like William Hughlot on 26 January 1385 – were dispatched to one or more customs districts ad examinandum et diligenter inquirendum de dictis collectoribus [in this instance: Boston and Hull] de statu officiorum suorum and above all to transport any and all surplus funds back to Westminster.⁵⁵ Interim accounting, of course, only made sense in districts which generated substantial customs income, namely for Southampton and the ports along the east coast. Curiously, however, there seems to be no record in the issue rolls that the London customers were ever summoned for interim accounting, although their district generated by far the most income for the crown, but one such account does in fact survive.⁵⁶

⁵⁶ This is the visus compoti of Adam Bamme and Gilbert Maghefeld for the issues of the London wool customs and subsidy between 29 Sept. 1395 and 24 June 1396 (TNA: PRO, E122/71/19). It is conceivable that the reason for the lack of explicit issue roll entries regarding the visus compoti of London customers is that they are concealed in

Although at the beginning of Richard II's reign interim accounts were described rather vaguely in the issue rolls, the technical term visus compoti quickly established itself.⁵⁷ A visus compoti was comprised of a schedule detailing the customs income to date and all payments the customers had made at the king's behest, whereby income and payments from the various sources of customs income (wool customs, wool subsidy, petty customs, tannage and poundage) were carefully kept separate. It would appear that the visus compoti merely served to inform the Exchequer about the state of the crown's financial resources in a particular customs district. To my knowledge, the Exchequer never ordered the customers to pay over any sums due to the crown, and often enough the customers were granted respite (respectum) in regard to payments which they expected to make, but had not yet made at the time of the visus compoti.

By 1408/09 rendering a visus compoti had become a normal part of the customers' duties. The Exchequer regularly summoned them to Westminster after half a year in office. At that point, a decision was made either to direct that a visus compoti be made or simply to summon the customers and the controller for the beginning of the following Michaelmas term.⁵⁸ If the Exchequer decided to require an interim account, its first action was to assign an auditor,⁵⁹ who examined the documents the customers had proffered and produced a schedule (cedula) to be presented as a bill (billa) to the Exchequer as a ⁵⁸ If an interim account was ordered, the customers were summoned along with their colleagues from other districts for final accounting on 30 Sept. (crastinum Michaelis). If no visus compoti was required, then the customers would either be summoned for 30 Sept. or for crastinum or quindena Trinitatis (whereupon a further summons for 30 Sept. normally followed). In the handful of cases in which the previous accounting period had not ended on Michaelmas, all summonses followed with a delay of half a year (visus compoti at Michaelmas and final accounting from crastinum Clausi Pasche). It is also worth mentioning that customers who were required to render a visus compoti were always summoned for final accounting by a writ of distraint. With the others, it sufficed to grant them a date of continuance (dies datus) and distraint them only if they did not appear. Finally, one should point out that the Exchequer did not begin to record the summoning of the customers systematically (i.e. without gaps) until the beginning of Henry VI's reign (1422/23). Before that, it was common for the King's Remembrancer to record the initial summoning of the customers for 30 Sept. and final accounting in the following Trinity term without bothering to record any summonses for Hilary or Easter terms.

whole.⁶⁰ To illustrate the procedure, let us take the visus compoti which the auditor Thomas Bennet⁶¹ produced in Easter term 1425 for the London tunnage and poundage customers Thomas Walsingham and William Estfeld with regard to alien imports and exports.⁶²

[Marginated] Inde solverunt per 19 tallias £1290 12s 4d

The auditor's task was simple: All he had to do was to calculate the total income from tunnage and poundage in London during the half-year between Michaelmas 1424 and the following Easter and draw up a corresponding schedule. Against the sum total of the issues of tunnage and poundage with which they had charged themselves (£1277 16s ¾d), the customers are said to have 'paid' £1290 12s 4d by 19 tallies, as the margination notes.

This raises a number of questions. Clearly, the tallies by which Walsingham and Estfeld 'paid' represent assignments⁶⁴ on the issues of tunnage and poundage. If they had paid £1290 12s 4d in cash at the receipt of the Exchequer when they appeared in Easter term 1425, they would have only been given one tally as a receipt. Our first question, therefore, is how assignments and, more generally, payments were made at the behest of the crown. Second, we must ask how the customers accounted for funds disbursed by order of the monarch at the visus compoti.

In our period, payments could be made by one of two methods: The Tally system and the Writ and Tally system.⁶⁵ Since Walsingham and Estfeld ‘paid’ by means of 19 tallies and since the vast majority of disbursements in 24 Henry VI were effected by the Tally system (Table 6), it is best to begin with it.

Payment by the Tally system was initiated by a warrant for issue under the privy seal directed to the treasurer and chamberlains, ordering them to pay a certain sum to a named payee, but normally leaving to them the decision of how to do so. Once it arrived in the Exchequer of Receipt, the warrant generated an entry in the issue roll recording disbursement of funds to the payee and – if the Exchequer was unable or unwilling to pay cash – the levying of a tally in assignment and corresponding entries in the tellers’ roll (by the clerk of the receipt) and in the receipt roll (by the under-clerk of the receipt) recording payment⁶⁶ by the customers to whom the Exchequer had decided to assign the payment. A tally was cut in the Lower Exchequer and split into two parts – the foil and the counterfoil –, the first of which was handed over to the payee and the second deposited with the deputy chamberlains of the receipt in Westminster.⁶⁷ The payee then proceeded to present the tally to the customers whose names were inscribed on it and entered in the tellers' and receipt rolls.⁶⁸ Once the customers had paid the sum in question,⁶⁹ the payee handed over the tally – which by virtue of the inscription was a receipt of the Exchequer for a named sum of money paid in by a named individual (or named individuals)⁷⁰ and whose physical possession therefore constituted proof of payment – which the customers then presented to the Exchequer when they came in to account.

⁶⁵ See Appendix I: How did the crown pay?

⁶⁶ On the mechanics of tally-cutting and the generation of the corresponding entries in the tellers’ and receipt rolls, see Steel, Receipt, p. 5.

Payment by the Writ and Letter system was always warranted by a patent letter which authorized payment from a named source of crown revenue to a named individual, usually (but not exclusively) the recipient of an annuity payable half-yearly at Michaelmas and Easter. Such periodic payments required first of all a systematic method of verification within the Exchequer itself, since the patent had originally been issued by the chancery under the great seal without the Exchequer's knowledge. This problem was solved by copying the patent (in a slightly abbreviated form) onto the originalia roll⁷¹ which the chancery sent over to the Exchequer each year. Here, the copy of the patent was transcribed in the Recorda section of the Lord Treasurer's Memoranda Roll, since it was the duty of the Lord Treasurer to keep track of everything of enduring importance to the crown's income, such as annuities. While this sufficed to keep the Exchequer abreast of what the crown had granted, payment had to be authorized by the chancery each half year. This involved ⁶⁹ Since the crown was generally strapped for cash, the customers often had to wait until enough money had been collected to pay off the tally in toto. Therefore, it is not surprising that the customers frequently paid ancient tallies, all of which were dated by the day, month and regnal year when they had been struck. However, the crown could set its own priorities. On the one hand, the king could favour certain payees by ordering the customers to pay the sum in question de primis denariis (see TNA: PRO, E368/216 Visus et status compotorum Michaelmas m 14d). On the other hand, the crown could hold up all other payments until the sum owing to one favoured recipient had been paid (see TNA: PRO, E403/515 m 22). On this whole question, see G.L. Harriss, 'Preference at the medieval Exchequer', Bulletin of the Institute of Historical Research 30, 1952, p. 17-40.

⁷⁰ According to G.L. Harriss, 'Fictitious loans', Economic History Review 2nd Series 8, 1955, p. 187-99, here p. 189, the inscription on a tally had to include [1] 'the name and office of the revenue collector on whom it was levied, [2] the name of the revenues which it assigned, [3] the sum for which it was cut and [4] the date in the regnal year of the king by whose authority it was issued.' (my numbering). However, the name of the payee was not inscribed on the tally, so that it could pass from hand to hand.

the production of two documents by the chancery. On the one hand, the chancery ordered the customers to pay directly, without making a detour via the treasurer and chamberlains, by (1) issuing a breve de liberate (which summarized the patent which was the ultimate warrant for all payments and which named the source – petty customs, wool subsidy etc. – from which payment was to be made) ordering the customers to pay the sum in question to the beneficiary and (2) handing it over to him. Simultaneously, the chancery directed the Upper Exchequer to allow the customers any funds they had disbursed to the payee, by issuing a breve de allocate under the great seal directed to the treasurer and barons which (1) summarized the breve de liberate, (2) noted the fact that the king had ordered the customers to pay and (3) directed the treasurer and barons to allow the customers any funds they had demonstrably disbursed to the payee by reason of the breve de liberate when they came in to account. The breve de allocate was copied into the Brevia directa baronibus section of the King's Remembrancer's Memoranda Roll under the appropriate term and the original – endorsed with an entry referring to the enrolment – was filed. The payee was now in a position to obtain payment from the customers. He – or someone acting on his behest⁷² – presented the liberate writ to the customers and requested payment, which they proceeded to do if they had enough cash on hand in the relevant customs chest (e.g. petty customs). At that point, the payee handed over the breve de liberate and produced one or more receipts under his own seal,⁷³ both of which the customers proffered when they came to account.

How did the customers account for payments effected by the Tally system? The visus compoti of the Poole customers in Trinity term 1453 shows how the process worked. Having been directed to appear at the beginning of Easter term,⁷⁴ Roger Ivey and Walter Payne were assigned (together with the controller John Rokes) to the auditor Richard Bedford when they came in to Westminster.⁷⁵ As the schedule he prepared shows, Ivey and Payne had received a total of £51 13s 8d between Michaelmas (29 September 1452) and Easter (1 April 1453).⁷⁶

⁷² This could be a creditor, a member of his retinue or a member of his household: Richard duke of York sent his receiver John Wyggemore (see the parcelle compoti of the wool account for 24 Henry VI, documents P 3, P 6 etc.). In all cases, the receipt recorded payment by the payee or by the hand (per manus) of the actual recipient.

Sewn onto this schedule is a slip of parchment⁷⁷ – designated internally as the declaracio of the customers – with the following entries:

Pole	Onus Rogeri Ivey et Walteri Payne collectorum custumarum et subsidiorum regis in portu ville de Pole et in singulis portubus et locis eidem portui adjacentibus, videlicet a festo sancti Michaelis anno 31 regis nunc [29 September 1452] usque festum Pasche accidens 1 die Aprilis proximum sequens [1 April 1453], scilicet per dimidium annum et unum diem £51 13s 8d De quibus iidem collectores solvunt per tres tallias ad receptam scaccarii levatas super hanc declaracionem ostensas et penes ipsos collectores remanentes £51 13s 4d Et petunt pro feodo suo ad 10 marcas per annum et feodo contrarotulatoris ad 40s per annum, scilicet pro rata per tempus predictum £4 7s 1½d Et sic in superplusagio hic £4 6s 9½d
-------------	--

Against the £51 13s 8d with which the customers charged themselves, the declaracio states that they ‘paid’ by means of three tallies worth a total of £51 13s 4d and requested allowance of a further £4 7s 1½d for their fees (and those of the controller) on a pro rata basis for the period from Michaelmas to Easter, which left them £4 6s 9½d in credit vis-à-vis the crown.

Now, it would have been simple enough for Bedford to work out by himself whether the customers' claim for fees was justified, but he would have required assistance in order to determine whether the three tallies which the customers proffered and retained were in fact genuine. Whose assistance he sought is shown by a further bill which was drawn up by John Inwardby⁷⁸ and which dealt with the three tallies by means of which the customers had 'paid'.

Now, it is very revealing that John Inwardby was consulted in regard to the tallies, since he was clerk of receipt.⁷⁹ As such he was required to (1) inscribe the tallies once they had been struck, (2) enter them in the tellers' roll and (3) file the teller's bill.⁸⁰ Therefore, Inwardby could do nothing other than inspect the tellers' bills and roll and determine whether a tally had in fact been struck. Although proving that the tally was genuine would involve matching it to the counter-tally (which was in the possession of the deputy chamberlains of the receipt), Inwardby's check against the tellers' bills and roll would suffice to determine whether there was an obvious reason to disallow the tally. Quite clearly, Inwardby supplemented the information he copied off the tallies which Ivey and Payne had proffered – the names of the officials on whom it was levied, the name of the revenues which had been assigned and the amount – with the information (indented in the transcript above) which he derived from the tellers' bill or roll, namely the term, the date the tally had been struck and the payee. Demonstrably, he could not have derived this information from the ⁸³ This is, of course, TNA: PRO, E207/16/5/8.

In the first place, the petition of the declaracio in regard to the fees of the customers and the controller (Et petunt pro feodo suo ...) was obviously approved, since the customers were granted respite for this sum until final accounting (De quibus respectuatur eis pro feodis ...). Second, the tallies are said to have been shown super hunc visum rather than super hanc declaracionem. Finally, the somewhat tentative conclusion of the auditor in his bill – Et sic in superplusagio hic £4 6s 9½d – was transformed into a positive statement: Et habent superplusagium £4 6s 9½d. Clearly, these were decisions which the auditor – even with the assistance of Inwardby – could not make on his own and which were reserved for a full session of the Exchequer, for which Bedford's schedule (with Inwardby's certification attached as an appendix) served as a bill.⁸⁴ Note that the Exchequer did not attempt a final validation of the tallies – which the payees had handed over to the customers and which they, in turn, had shown in the course of the visus –, since that would have involved comparison with the counter-tallies and retention of the tally together with its counter-foil, whereas Ivey and Payne are said to have retained the three tallies (per tres tallias ... penes ipsos collectores remanentes). Clearly, final validation of the tallies was postponed until Hilary, when the customers were to return to Westminster for final accounting.⁸⁵ The same was done in regard to the yearly fees⁸⁶ of the customers (10 marks per annum) and the controller (40s per annum) for the period the visus covered. The interim account showed that the customers' credits were £4 6s 9½d higher than the total of customs and subsidies they had received.

This explains the marginated entry on the schedule of the visus compoti of the collectors of tunnage and poundage in London. Thomas Walsingham and William Estfeld had shown (and, undoubtedly, retained) 19 tallies totalling £1290 12s 4d. The examination of the tallies and the Exchequer's own records had shown that the tallies had in fact been struck. Therefore, the Exchequer credited Walsingham and Estfeld with the corresponding sum, as noted on the schedule, pending final accounting.

Accounting for payments by the Writ and Letter system may be illustrated by the visus compoti of the Sandwich customers Godwin Catesby and Thomas Medilmore for the period from 29 September 1432 to 12 April 1433. Having charged themselves with £710 2s 10¼d for wool customs and subsidy, petty customs and tunnage and poundage, they first 'paid' by showing twelve tallies dating between 30 May 1432 and 26 May 1433 worth a total of £671 18s 6½d to a plenary session of the Exchequer.⁸⁷ They were then granted respite for a payment on the annuity of Humphrey, duke of Gloucester:

Et respectantur prefatis collectoribus usque alias pro tot denariis per ipsos solutis Humfrido duci Gloucestrie constabulario castris Dovorrie et custodi Quinque Portuum de illis centum marcis annuis eidem duci per dominum Henricum Quintum nuper regem Anglie per litteras suas patentes,⁸⁸ quas dictus dominus rex nunc confirmavit,⁸⁹ concessis pro constabularia ville Dovorrie percipiendis de custuma et subsidio predictis in portu predicto per manus collectorum eorundem custume et subsidii ibidem pro tempore existentes ad terminos Pasche et sancti Michaelis, videlicet pro termino Pasche dicto anno 11^{mo} £33 6s 8d per breve regis de magno sigillo suo prefatis collectoribus directum ac litteras acquietancie Roberti Shiryngton generalis receptoris predicti ducis de recepta curie ostensa

Note that the collectors presented only two documents to the Exchequer sitting in plenary session (curie): a writ under the great seal directed to the customers themselves – clearly the breve de liberate – and a receipt from Robert Shiryngton, duke Humphrey's receiver general. No mention was made of the breve de allocate. Note also that the Exchequer did not undertake to verify the writ by directing the King's Remembrancer to search out the breve de allocate and comparing it with the breve de liberate and Shiryngton's receipt. Nor was a final decision reached on whether to allow the customers the disbursement: they were simply granted respite usque alias. What was meant by that is revealed at the end of the visus, where the Exchequer granted the customers respite usque compotum suum for the remaining 17s 7¾d still owing to the crown. Immediately thereafter, a different hand recorded the order to the sheriff of Kent to distrain Catesby and Medilmore for final accounting on 30 September 1433.

Therefore, we can see that the visus compoti was just an interim account, designed to inform the Exchequer about the state of the crown's financial resources in a particular customs district. No final decision was reached on any claims advanced by the customers for allowance for payments by tally (which were shown to the Exchequer and retained by the customers) or by writ and letter (which were also shown to the Exchequer and retained). Nor indeed was a final decision reached regarding the fees of the customers and controller. In all cases, the Exchequer, sitting in full session, merely granted respite until final accounting.

After completion of the visus compoti, the schedule prepared by the auditor and the documents the visus had generated within the Exchequer were handed over to the King's Remembrancer, who entered a fair copy of the visus compoti in the section of his Memoranda Roll called Fines, manucapciones, dies datus, respectus et visus under the term in which the interim accounting had taken place.⁹⁰ Initially, however, the King's Remembrancer spiked the visus compoti until he had distrained the customers to appear for final accounting. Once the distraint writ had been sent out, the King's Remembrancer entered an s' on the schedule and filed it under the other bills of that term.⁹¹

This bi-annual rhythm of interim and final accounting apparently proved to be very effective, and the Exchequer retained it for the rest of our period. At the beginning of Michaelmas term 1407 at the very latest – and probably earlier⁹² – the King's Remembrancer drew up a list of the Status et visus custuma- rum in singulis portubus Anglie for the relevant half year (Michaelmas or Easter). These lists of customers who were to account were clearly working documents, since a number of distinct scribal hands entered all further measures, for instance the assignment of an auditor or the completion of accounting. Once final accounting had taken place, the King's Remembrancer's duties came to an end. Consequently, the last entry in these lists is normally comp[utarunt]. The entry in the Status et visus customarum was then struck through from top to bottom, making it simple for the King's Remembrancer to cast an eye down the membrane and see which customers had not yet appeared to account and summon them anew.

It is important to note that the half-yearly list of customers to be called to account in the Status et visus customarum was the basis for the dispatch of writs of distraint to the sheriffs of the counties in question.⁹³ At the end of term, these writs – together with all other writs the Exchequer sent out – were

Et quia amoti sunt ab officio predicto, preceptum sit vicecomiti, quod ipsos distringeret per terras etc., ita etc., in crastino Clausi Pasche ad computandum in premissis [Margination: s'; r']

The fact that the scribe who wrote the entry in E102/1 m 2 used the information in the Recorda section of the King's Remembrancer's Memoranda Roll up to the point where he noted that the customers were to be summoned for crastinum Clausi Pasche leaps to the eye. Once the sheriff returned the distraint writ, the King's Remembrancer entered a long-tailed 'r' in his Memoranda Roll and Ad quem diem vicecomes retornavit breve in E102/1 m 2. A second scribal hand then noted the appearance of the customers before the Exchequer in E102/1 m 2, the assignment of William Hesylle as their auditor and the reason for adjournment (the absence of the controller). Even if E102/1 m 2 does not contain any cross-reference to the King's Remembrancer's Memoranda Roll, the relationship between the two documents is plain.

⁹³ See TNA: PRO, E207/12/8/7 for a list, drawn up at the end of Hilary term 1414 (1 Hen. V), of the customers to be summoned for crastinum Clausi Pasche. Under the heading Fiunt brevia directa vicecomitibus ad distringendum collectores in portubus subscriptis retornabilia crastino Clausi Pasche the King's Remembrancer's clerk listed the chief ports of the customs districts in one column and the counties in a second column. As the writs were dispatched, the clerk entered a dot just to the left of the name of the chief port. Note that this list was alphabetized in precisely the same order as the entries in E102, namely by the name of the county (and not the chief port). To my mind, this proves that E207/12/8/7 and similar lists were drawn up on the basis of the entries in E102.

bundled by county and return day (crastinum Michaelis, octabas Michaelis, quindena Michaelis etc.) and counted. This was the basis for the table of the Brevia emanencia de scaccario, which the Exchequer drew up each term and which showed how many writs for each return day had been sent to the sheriffs of which counties. Only after the writs had been counted and the Brevia emanencia de scaccario – normally the last piece in the bundle of bills for the term – drawn up could the bundles be given to the Exchequer’s messengers for delivery to the sheriffs, who had to certify receipt of each bundle separately.⁹⁴

Once the sheriffs returned the writs – bundle by bundle – the Exchequer entered a long-tailed ‘r’ beside the name of the county, provided the writs arrived on time. If this was not the case, then the clerk entered a cross beside the name of the county. If the writs were subsequently returned, then the clerk entered a long-tailed ‘r’ beside the name of the county and the date of receipt next to the number of writs in the corresponding column. This procedure may be illustrated by an excerpt from one such table, for Trinity term 1453.⁹⁵

Numerus brevium emanencium de scaccario de termino sancte Trinitatis, videlicet 15 die Julii anno 31 regis Henrici VI [15 July 1453] retornabilium ad dies subscriptos, videlicet

From 1408/09 to the end of our period, the Exchequer’s practice remained unchanged. After a half year in office, the customers were summoned to Westminster, where the Exchequer decided whether to conduct a visus compoti or simply summon them for final accounting. However, the form of words in which the King’s Remembrancer captured these administrative actions did change. In 31 Henry VI (1452/53) the King’s Remembrancer began to break off the fair copy of the visus compoti after determining whether the customers were indebted to the crown or in credit. In complete contrast to earlier years, the visus no longer ends with an entry noting that a writ of distraint had been sent out to summon the customers to the final accounting in Westminster.

⁹⁴ Cf. TNA: PRO, E207/16/5/45: Presens indentura testatur, quod Johannes Baxtere vicecomes ville Novi Castri Super Tynam recepit de Johanne Dene uno nunciorum currencium de scaccario domini regis 2 die Junii anno regni regis Henrici VI post conquestum Anglie 31 [2 June 1453] 13 brevia domini regis in duobus filaciis retornabilia coram baronibus domini regis de eodem scaccario in crastino sancti Johannis Baptiste proximo futuro. The sheriff’s seal is impressed on the indenture.

⁹⁵ All in all, 759 writs were sent out by the King’s Remembrancer in Trinity term 1453.

Reading the King's Remembrancer's Memoranda Rolls in isolation, one could gain the impression that the visus compoti no longer constituted the basis for the King's Remembrancer's summoning of the customers to final accounting. However, this was not the case, as the surviving visus compoti (TNA: PRO, E122 and E207) continue to contain a marginated 's', showing that they did indeed serve as the basis for the customers' summons to final accounting and that the older practice had survived without a break. The second change in the form of the visus compoti occurred in 2/3 Edward IV (1462/63). Up to 1462/63 the sum of the issues of customs and subsidies was always followed by the statement, sicut continetur in quadam cedula de visu per N.N. auditorem liberata, que est inter billas de hoc termino. From 1462/63 its place was taken by the entry, sicut continetur in X rotulis ipsorum collectorum de particulis super hunc visum ostensis et examinatis ac per sacramentum ipsorum collectorum.⁹⁷ However, the impression that the auditor no longer drew up a schedule in the course of the visus compoti would be false. Precisely for 1462/63 a number of schedules have survived in document class E207 which are identical in form to those of earlier years.

FINAL ACCOUNTING

At the end of the accounting period, the customers and the controller were summoned to Westminster for final accounting. Since this could be a long drawn out procedure, it is scarcely surprising that the customers often nominated deputies to act in their place. This was permissible, so long as one of the barons of the Exchequer had given his approval, as the following example – from Trinity term 1453 – shows.

Norff Thomas Fenne unus collectorum custumarum et subsidiorum in portu ville de Magna Jernemuthe posuit loco suo Thomam Edmond alterum collectorum ad reddendum pro eo domino regi compotum de custumis et subsidiis predictis de tempore, quo inde fuerunt collectores ibidem et non computarunt, et ad omnia alia etc.

*Per J. Durem*⁹⁸

This slip of parchment served as a bill for the Exchequer, and a number of similar approvals are transmitted in the Exchequer bills (TNA: PRO, E207). The King's Remembrancer was responsible for transcribing such deputizations, which were entered in the section Presentaciones, attornati, dies datus et respectus in the Memoranda Roll.

⁹⁸ TNA: PRO, E207/16/5/92. John Durem was one of the barons of the Exchequer. The approval of a deputy could also be given by a full session of the Exchequer, e.g. in TNA: PRO, E207/16/5/83.

Irrespective of whether a customer had named a deputy or appeared in person, someone had to turn up on the return day. The summons for a particular return day – crastinum Michaelis, for instance – seems to have been a pure formality, since I know of no case in which the Exchequer began work precisely on 30 September. Presumably, the customers turned up and waited until being called up to take the oath to account faithfully⁹⁹ and hand in their account and the parcelle, whereupon the Exchequer assigned them an auditor. It would appear that the customers had to be prepared to be patient, since it could take a long time before they were called up. The Bristol customers Thomas Russell and Makelin Waleyn, who were summoned to Westminster as of 30 September 1434 to account for the period 19 October 1433 to 5 July 1434, had to wait until 9 October 1434 to be sworn in.¹⁰⁰ Entries in the Status et visus customarum in singulis portubus Anglie suggest that other customers had to wait even longer. For instance, the Exchequer only assigned auditors to the customers summoned to Westminster for 30 September 1452 on 24 and 30 October, 7, 8, 14, 17 and 21 November 1452.¹⁰¹

Having taken the oath to account, handed in their documentation and been assigned an auditor, the customers again had to wait around until the auditor had calculated the sum of the issues of the customs and subsidies, the summa recepte, for which the customers had to answer to the crown. The auditor's task was to compare the customs account (particule compoti) with the controlment roll and determine if these two records of the entry and exit of ships and goods corresponded materially in every particular.¹⁰² If this was not the case, then the official was in deep trouble. The minute the auditor had reason to suspect that a customs official had winked at smuggling – and consequently withheld crown income – he was required to report this to the Exchequer in full session. The example of the Bristol customers Thomas ⁹⁹ The statute 4 Hen. IV, St. 1, c. 20 (Luders et al. (eds.), Statutes of the Realm, vol. 2, p. 139), gives us an idea about what the form of the oath must have been: et qe chescun custumer desore enavaunt sur son accompt rendre en leschequer soit jurrez par son serement de respondre loialmont a mesme nostre seigneur le roy sanz fraude ou male engine des toutz maners proitz et commiditees pur paiement dascun assignement, soit il par taill ou autrement, par lui ou aucun autre resceuz ou a resceivers pur achate dascun taille ou en autre manere qeconque. For the corresponding oath of the controller see TNA: PRO, E159/210 Recorda Michaelmas m 18.

¹⁰¹ TNA: PRO, E102/2 m 25.

¹⁰² It is often stated that the chief weakness of the English customs system was the Exchequer's inability to discover speculation if the customers and the controller had colluded to hide it and made sure that the customs account and the controlment roll were identical (if false). While one can find numerous examples of collusion in the Recorda of the King's Remembrancer's Memoranda Rolls (e.g. TNA: PRO, E159/167 Recorda Hilary m 17), I am not convinced that such malfeasance could be kept hidden forever. See Stuart Jenks, 'Zollamt, Häfen und Außenhandel in England: ca. 1377-1470', Vierteljahrschrift für Sozial- und Wirtschaftsgeschichte 75, 1988, p. 305-38.

Russell and Makelin Walewyn demonstrates this in full detail. The auditor, Roger Appelton, noticed a number of discrepancies between their customs account and the controlment roll of John Sistern, which had been handed over to him on 9 October 1434. Consequently, he appeared before the Exchequer on 15 November 1434 and stated, *qualiter ipse super examinationem particularum dictorum collectorum in eorum libro supradicto contentarum facta cum particulis in dictis rotulis dicti contrarotulatoris contentis invenit, quod 36 naves in eisdem rotulis separatim plenius specificate onerate cum diversis mercandis infra portum predictum per tempus predictum ... separatim applicantes et extra eundem portum per idem tempus exeuntes ac diverse mercandise in eisdem navibus contente necnon custume et subsidia domino regi de eisdem mercandis debita, que quidem custume et subsidia inter se attingunt ad summam £76 13s 9¼d, videlicet custume inde ad £15 6s 3½d et subsidia ad £61 7s 5¼d, extra dictum librum collectorum predictorum ommittuntur et concelantur.*¹⁰³

In the vast majority of cases, the customs account and the controlment roll did not diverge materially from one another,¹⁰⁴ and the auditor could proceed to calculate the summa recepte, the raw total of the crown's income from customs and subsidies. This was a straightforward, if time-consuming task. The rates of customs and subsidies were common knowledge, and the auditor simply had to identify which of the many categories of customs and/or subsidies the entries related to and multiply the total units (in the case of goods like wine, wool, cloth and wax which were customed by unit, e.g. tun, sack etc.) or the total value (for the goods which were customed ad valorem) to arrive at a sub-total for the particular category (e.g. tunnage). Then he had to add up the crown's income category by category to arrive at the total amount of crown income, for which the customers had to answer at the Exchequer. These calculations, which the Exchequer designated as the determinatio, were first entered as a table at the end of the customs account. In order to illustrate this procedure, let us look at the auditor's calculations (in Michaelmas term 1436) for the customs account of John Bedford and John Tamworth for the issues of the customs and subsidies in Hull between Michaelmas 1435 and Michaelmas 1436.

¹⁰⁶ English broadcloths had a standard dimension of 24 x 1½ yards: St. 7 Hen. IV, c. 10 (Statutes of the Realm, vol. 2, p. 154). Cloths of non-standard dimensions were reckoned as fractions of whole cloths, as the Lynn petty customs account for 24 May to 29 Sept. 1398 (TNA, PRO, E122/159/7) shows. The account itself shows Hanseatic exports of 36 broadcloths sine grano and 58 narrow cloths sine grano. The auditor's determinatio shows Hanseatic exports of 32½ broadcloths. If we calculate $(36 \div 2) + (58 \div 4) = 18 + 14\frac{1}{2} = 32\frac{1}{2}$, then we can conclude that the auditor's calculations were correct and that the question of whether a particular piece of cloth had the exact length and breadth required by the Assize of Cloth posed no great difficulties for the customers or the Exchequer: Whatever did not match, was simply treated as a half cloth, quarter cloth (or whatever the appropriate fraction might be). Therefore, in regard to the English customs administration, the comments of A.R. Bridbury, English Clothmaking in the Middle Ages, London 1983, p. 106-11, are wide of the mark. For customs purposes, the English customs administration distinguished three kinds of cloth, depending upon the extent to which the most expensive dye (kermes, also called granum) had been used in their manufacture. Those dyed completely with granum (pannus curtus cum grano or de scarleta) were charged most heavily, those partially dyed with granum (pannus curtus cum dimidio grano) less and those dyed altogether without granum (pannus curtus sine grano) least of all: See Table 2 for the rates (On scarlets see John Munro, 'The Medieval Scarlet and the Economics of Sartorial Splendour', N.B. Harte, K.G. Ponting (eds.), Cloth and clothing in Medieval Europe. Essays in Memory of Professor E.M. Carus-Wilson (Pasold Studies in Textile History 2), London 1983, p. 13-70). The actual colour of the cloth in question was immaterial,

First of all, note that Bedford and Tamworth's auditor omitted a number of categories of crown income from customs and subsidies, simply because no corresponding goods had been shipped via Hull during the accounting period. Moreover, it is to be emphasized that the determinatio was entered in the customs account only – and not in the controlment roll – because only Bedford and Tamworth were fiscally responsible vis-à-vis the crown. Even if the first membrane of an account is missing, the presence of a determinatio on the last membrane is always incontrovertible proof that it is a customs account and not a controlment roll. Customs accounts can also usually be identified by the fact that interim sums are entered at the foot of the membrane (or page). Occasionally, this takes the form of the notation of the counters on the board (Illustration 4).¹⁰⁷

Following the completion of the determinatio, the auditor transferred the information (which he had entered at the end of the customs account) to a second piece of parchment. This copy of the determinatio, which displayed the crown's income from the customs district in question, divided up according to the various categories of customs and subsidy revenue, was entered into the Enrolled Customs Accounts (TNA: PRO, E356). The Enrolled Customs Accounts constituted one part of the Pipe Rolls (TNA: PRO, E372), even if they had been bound separately in accordance with § 8 of the Cowick Ordinances¹⁰⁸ as the example of the Danzig merchant Johann Swart demonstrates. On 30 Oct. 1447 Swart had customed 20½ panni curti sine grano in Ipswich. However, on 12 June 1448, an investigation ordered by the Exchequer showed that of these cloths 11 were dyed blue, 3½ light blue and 6 medly (i.e. with different coloured warp and woof): TNA: PRO, E159/224 Recorda Easter m 11.

because by 1323 the Pipe Roll had grown to such dimensions as to be unwieldy. Consequently, all entries recording sums owing to the crown for which the sheriff did not have to answer were entered onto rolls which were physically separate for convenience's sake.¹⁰⁹ Since the Enrolled Customs Accounts were part of the Pipe Rolls, they were drawn up by the clerks in the Pipe Roll Office. That meant that the auditor had to send the copy of the determinatio over to the Pipe Roll Office for transcription. Once this had been taken care of, the clerks in the Pipe Roll Office entered *Irrotulatur rotulo compotorum de subsidio 3s de dolio et 12d de libra*¹¹⁰ onto the dorse of the copy of the determinatio and sent it back to the auditor.

In the meantime, the auditor had to report back to the Exchequer on the state of the account. In order to do so, he produced yet another bill for the Exchequer with the heading Nomina computancium coram N.N., entering his name as well as the term and indicating – in general, if not always – which of the two remembrancers was responsible for summoning those royal officials (i.e. not only the customers) who were required to account. In the case of the customers, this was always the King's Remembrancer, which the auditor indicated by entering Ex parte remembratoris regis in the upper left-hand corner of the Nomina computacium bill.¹¹¹

While the purpose of the accounting procedure up to this point was to determine the crown's total income from customs and subsidies in the individual customs district during the accounting period in question, it was now necessary to determine the customers' net liability vis-à-vis the crown. It is imperative to emphasize that no final decision had been reached in the course of the visus compoti on the validity of payments effected by the customers (whether they had been made by tally or by writ and letter). Everything had to be checked again and validated in a full session of the Exchequer.¹¹² Let us demonstrate this by returning to the visus compoti of the Sandwich customers Godwin Catesby and Thomas Medilmore and comparing it to their final account. For the period from 29 September 1432 to 12 April 1433, they declared that they had received a total of £710 2s 10¼d. Against this sum they reckoned a total of ¹⁰⁹ From the early 1220s, these 'foreign accounts' had been excised from the sheriffs' accounts in the Pipe Roll and entered onto separate membranes, which were sewn onto the Pipe Roll at the end.

¹¹² This was mandated by § 1 of the Westminster ordinance of 1326: Et les allowances a faire par brefs et tailles a la fyn de tieux acomptes se facent en plein Eschequier: Hall, Red Book, vol. 3, p. 932.

When Catesby and Medilmore came in to the Exchequer in Michaelmas term 1433 for final accounting for the entire period from 29 September 1432 to 17 August 1433, they declared receipts of £1080 14s 3¼d, against which they reckoned the payments which they had effected. Since the decisions regarding the tallies and the customers' petitions for allocation (i.e. allowance of sums paid out at the crown's behest) and exoneration (i.e. for sums which the auditor had wrongly charged the customers) – all of which, if approved, would reduce the customers' liability – were reserved for the Exchequer sitting in full session, the preparation had to be meticulous. Therefore, the auditor directed the customers to submit their parcelle compoti, which were comprised of the tallies they had received as proof of payment and their petitions for allocation and exoneration together with all supporting documents.¹¹⁶ At the same time, the auditor sent the copy of the determinatio (which had been copied into the Enrolled Customs Accounts and returned with the appropriate endorsement) to the baron who was responsible for guiding the customers through final accounting.¹¹⁷ In addition, the customers were given a date for final accounting before a full session of the Exchequer. Finally, the Lord Treasurer's Remembrancer – who would assume responsibility for all further summons once the customers had presented their petitions to the full Exchequer (which would deal with the petitions and make a preliminary determination of the customers' net liability to the crown) – entered a brief summary of the copy of the auditor's determinatio in his Memoranda Roll (TNA: PRO, E368) in the section entitled Visus et status compotorum under the appropriate term. Take, for instance, the first lines of the Lord Treasurer's Remembrancer's entry for the final accounting of John Bokenham and John Bukworth for the issues of wool customs and subsidies and petty customs in Lynn between 29 September 1416 and 29 September 1417:

At some point before the full session of the Exchequer which would deal with the customers' petitions for allocation and exoneration, the auditor had to examine the petitions and their supporting documents. The examinatio of the parcelle compoti was a long drawn out procedure, which is best understood if one takes a concrete example. At final accounting, Thomas Chynnore and John

¹¹⁷ With this, the names of the baron and the auditor were entered at the head of the copy of the determinatio.

¹¹⁸ TNA: PRO, E368/190 Visus et status compotorum Michaelmas m 14. Usually, a second scribal hand continues the entry following the Debent clause.

Norman, who had collected the petty customs in London from 29 September 1435 to 29 September 1436, handed in not only seven tallies, but also a petition for allowance of the customary expenses of collectors of the petty customs in London¹¹⁹ and a twelve point petition for allowance of payments of various annuities. The auditor whose task it was to evaluate these parcelle could set the tallies aside for the moment, since the Exchequer – sitting in full session – would consider them valid if they matched up to the counterfoils which were in the possession of the deputy chamberlains of the Exchequer of Account.¹²⁰ The auditor's first task, then, was to determine whether the customary expenses Chynnore and Norman claimed had in fact been allowed to earlier customers.¹²¹ Then he had to reach a preliminary decision as to whether the sums which the customers had paid out by virtue of the Writ and Letter system were actually allowable. After all, the customers' parcelle compoti only contained the brevia de liberate (which they had received from the payees) and the indentures or receipts (which certified payment). In each individual case, the auditor had to determine whether there was a corresponding breve de allocate, that is to say he had to direct the King's Remembracer's clerks to search out the corresponding document. If the brevia de allocate could be found in the King's Remembracer's Memoranda Roll, an entry to this effect was made on the dorse of each individual *breve de allocate*¹²² and the originals were tied up in a bundle together with the brevia de liberate and the receipts (or indentures).¹²³ Assuming the auditor found no forgeries amongst the parcelle compoti, his next step was to draw up a bill for the full session of the Exchequer which would deal with the customers' petition. Take, for the sake

¹²⁰ On the whereabouts of the tallies prior to and during accounting, see Appendix II.C.

¹²¹ At least one certification that this was indeed the case has survived among the documentation of the accounting of Chynnore and Norman for the issues of the petty customs in London during the period from 27 Aug. to 29 Sept. 1434: TNA: PRO, E207/14/10 (unnumbered).

¹²² See, for instance, TNA: PRO, E122/75/22/4. This is a breve de allocate dated 7 Oct. 1436 for Christina Houchon, who had been granted 4d per diem from the London petty customs. The breve de allocate was directed to the treasurer and barons of the Exchequer and ordered them to allow the customers all sums which they had demonstrably paid to Houchon. On the dorse of the document was entered Irrotulatur termino sancti Michaelis anno 14, rotulo 24 (= TNA: PRO, E159/212 Brevia directa baronibus Michaelmas m 24).

¹²³ This sounds complicated, but is in fact very simple. If the bundle (tied together with a parchment thong in the upper left-hand corner) has not come asunder, the parcelle compoti are in good order: payment No. 1 is documented by breve de allocate No. 1, breve de liberate No. 1, receipt(s) No. 1; payment 2 by breve de allocate No. 2, breve de liberate No. 2, receipt(s) No. 2 and so forth.

Once the auditor had drawn up this bill, sewn it to the bundle containing the brevia and the receipts and sent it – together with the tallies – off to the baron of the Exchequer whose task it was to guide the customers through final accounting, his job was done. Given the amount of checking that had to be done to evaluate the parcelle compoti and prepare the bill, it is scarcely surprising that the auditors were frequently forced to report to the Exchequer that final accounting would have to be delayed for a term because they had been unable to complete the examinacio on time.¹²⁶

The full session of the Exchequer had two tasks: verifying payments by tally and dealing with the petitions of the customers. The first task was simple. The customers proffered the tallies they had received from various payees, and the deputy chamberlains of the Exchequer of Account were directed to search out the corresponding counter-tallies for verification. In case of doubt, a check might also be made in the tellers' rolls and/or the receipt rolls, in order to determine if a tally had in fact been levied for the stated amount.¹²⁷ If everything matched up, the Exchequer accepted the tallies as proof of payment and a corresponding entry was made in the Enrolled Customs Account.

If the Exchequer approved the customers' petitions for allocation for payment at the behest of the crown, then a corresponding entry was made on the dorse of the relevant breve de allocate beneath the Irrotulatur entry which recorded where it had been copied onto the King's Remembrancer's Memoranda Roll. In Chynnore and Norman's case, this entry was as follows.

*Allocatur in compoto Thome Chynnore et Johannis Norman collectorum parve custume in portu civitatis London' a festo sancti Michaelis anno 13 regis Henrici VIⁱⁱ usque idem festum tunc proximum sequens rotulo compotorum de eadem custuma*¹²⁸

¹²⁶ See, for example, the Nomina computancium list which the auditor William Proctour drew up at the end of Michaelmas term 1462: Kyngeston super Hull: Johannes Fereby et Johannes Grene collectores custumarum et subsidiorum regis ibidem assignabantur ad computandum in medio hujus termini et parcelle compoti sunt in examinando [to which a second scribal hand added] et habent diem per curiam usque proximum terminum: TNA, PRO, E207/18/4 unnumbered. It is self-evident that the second scribal hand recorded the decision of a full session of the Exchequer (on the basis of a corresponding bill), that the petitions of the Hull customers could not be dealt with in the present term and that this would have to be adjourned to Hilary term, simply because the auditor had not been able to complete the examinacio by mid-term.

¹²⁷ See Appendix II.B.

¹²⁸ TNA: PRO, E122/75/22/1 dorse. The reference to the rotulus compotorum de eadem custuma indicated the account in the Enrolled Customs Accounts: TNA: PRO, E356/18 m 20, calendared Jenks, Enrolled Customs Accounts, vol. 7, E356/18, No. 118.

In the case of Chynnore and Norman, all petitions for allocation were approved. Therefore, the Exchequer scribe bracketed allocatur against all entries on the auditor's bill quoted above. As the entry on the dorse of the individual brevia de allocate shows, the Exchequer's decision was also entered in the Enrolled Customs Accounts. Finally, the Lord Treasurer's Remembrancer – who had taken over the task of summoning the customers from the King's Remembrancer¹²⁹ – recorded the decisions of the full session of the Exchequer in the section of his Memoranda Roll entitled Visus et status compotorum (TNA: PRO, E368) in the appropriate term. The bill which the auditor had prepared and the customers' petition were cancelled by being struck through from top to bottom and were then delivered – together with the customs account and the parcelle compoti – to the King's Remembrancer for archiving.¹³⁰

Verification of tallies and allocation of payments at the behest of the crown was the easy part of final accounting. Dealing with the customers' petitions for exoneration was more difficult, since the Exchequer had to determine if the auditor had charged the customers with sums which they did not, in fact, owe to the crown and hence were not liable to pay. In order to understand this decision-making process, it is well to look closely at a specific example. Let us therefore return to the account of the Lynn customers John Bokenham and John Bukworth for the period from 29 September 1416 to 29 September 1417. After reaching a decision on the customers' petitions, the Exchequer determined that they were still liable to the crown for £10 4s 6½d (for wool customs and subsidy and petty customs) and £9 13s 4d (for tunnage and poundage), which the Lord Treasurer's Remembrancer recorded in his Memoranda Roll.¹³¹ At this point Bokenham and Bukworth presented a petition for exoneration with regard to the goods in two ships, explaining that the merchandise had already been customed in other ports.¹³² In support of their petition, Bokenham and Bukworth attached the cocket which the customers in Blakeney (in the ¹²⁹ The King's Remembrancer's responsibility for summoning the customers ended at the moment the first full session of the Exchequer came together to deal with the customers' petitions. Once this session was over, the full Exchequer sent the King's Remembrancer a notice that the customers had 'come and accounted' and that their successors in office were now required to account. Some of these notices were obviously scribbled in great haste: See TNA: PRO, E207/15/13 unnumbered, referring to the Sandwich customers Richard Veer and Ralph Toke. The notices were transcribed verbatim in the recorda of the King's Remembrancer's Memoranda Roll and formed the basis for summoning the customers' successors in office.

¹³² The original petition is transmitted under TNA: PRO, E122/95/31. For the transcription by the Lord Treasurer's Remembrancer see E368/190 Visus et status compotorum Michaelmas m 14 (m 190 stamped).

Yarmouth customs district) had issued on 14 March 1417 when the merchandise had been imported by the alien merchants Carl Henrykson, Arnold Petirson and Peter Johanson in La Seynte Marye shippe of the Dordrecht skipper Peter Johanson. In the same petition, the customers also sought exoneration for certain cloth exports by the indigenous merchants William Style and William Ingold 'in a certain ship' (in aliqua navi), explaining that customs and subsidy had already been paid in Ipswich. In this case, the customers were unable to attach a cocket and were reduced to swearing an oath that their statements were true and requesting the Exchequer to examine the Ipswich customs account of John Godeston and John Hawe. Pending investigation, the Exchequer granted Bokenham and Bukworth respite (respectum) for one term and set a date – quindena Hillarii (28 January 1418) – for the continuation of accounting. At the same time, the Exchequer directed the sheriff of Norfolk to ascertain by inquisition whether the goods allegedly customed in Blakeney were the same as those named in the cocket, as Bokenham and Bukworth had claimed.¹³³ Judging from the delays, it would appear that the sheriff had difficulties in conducting this inquisition, and Bokenham and Bukworth were summoned each term from Hilary 1418 to Michaelmas 1422, only to hear that the matter had been adjourned for yet another term. Finally, in 1430/31, the Exchequer found that the customers only owed 18s, and the Pipe Roll recorded payment of this sum on 9 November 1431.¹³⁴ In short, it had taken the Exchequer over 13 years to complete accounting on one customs account.

The Lord Treasurer's Remembrancer was responsible for summoning the customers from the first full session of the Exchequer in which the treasurer and barons dealt with the account for the first time until accounting was completed, at which point the Lord Treasurer's Remembrancer entered Ideo non fiat hic ulterius executio (no further action is necessary) in his Memoranda Roll at the end of the entry for the account. However, the Exchequer did not always wait until the customers had paid the last farthing owing to the crown before declaring accounting complete. It was fairly common to break off the accounting procedure although the customers still owed money or indeed were in surplus (habent superplusagium) vis-à-vis the crown.

If accounting procedure was declared complete with the customers in arrears to the crown, the Exchequer directed them to pay up. There were a number of methods of doing so. If the customers were still in office, it was simple enough to charge the sum in question to their current account. For instance, at the end of the entry in the Enrolled Customs Accounts for the account of John Godestone and William Warner for the issues of the wool customs and subsidy and of petty customs in Ipswich in the period from 12 April to 29 September 1413, the Exchequer recorded a net liability of £43 19s 5½d and directed that Godestone and Warner respondent in rotulo sequenti post aliud comptum suum de hujusmodi custumis et subsidiis a festo sancti Michaelis anno 1 [29 Sept. 1413] usque festum sancti Michaelis proximum sequens [29 Sept. 1414],¹³⁵ that is to say in the following account. It was also possible to transfer surplusses from one account to balance out deficits in another, provided all parties were agreed and the transfer was approved by a full session of the Exchequer on the basis of a corresponding bill. The Boston customer John Belle, for instance, petitioned the Exchequer on 14 November 1403 to transfer £40 14s 10½d of the total surplus of £76 5s 3d from his and John Cok's account for wool customs and subsidy and petty customs in Boston from 2 October to 6 November 1403 to the immediately following account of Richard Aylward and himself for wool customs and subsidy and petty customs in Boston from 6 November 1402 to 19 May 1403.¹³⁶

However, the Exchequer employed these methods of collecting the residue of an account comparatively rarely. It was far more common simply to transfer the debt onto the Pipe Roll and collect it from the sheriff of the appropriate county. This method appears to have impressed itself upon the Exchequer with ever-increasing force for the very reasons which the case of the 18s debt of the Lynn customers Bokenham and Bukworth makes apparent. It was difficult and time-consuming to summon customers (who were not always cooperative or easy to find) to the Exchequer term after term in order to pay small sums. By contrast, it was simplicity itself to make the sheriff responsible for the payment, since he was required to come to Westminster at least yearly to account anyway, so that no special summons was necessary. Moreover, each sheriff was responsible for the debts his predecessors had not discharged, whereas only the customers themselves – and not their successors in office – were liable for debts to the crown arising from their period in office. Once the customers' debt had been transferred to the Pipe Roll, the Exchequer could dispense with summoning them and collect the debt from the sheriff. How he recovered the money from the customers was, to put it briefly, his problem.

As soon as the customers' debt had been transferred to the Pipe Roll, the Clerk of the Pipe (clericus magni rotuli) entered a cross-reference to the relevant section of the correct year's Pipe Roll¹³⁷ at the end of the record of ac-

¹³⁵ TNA: PRO, E356/17 m 42d.

¹³⁶ TNA: PRO, E368/176 Recorda Michaelmas m 12d and E356/17 m 5d. It is clear that this was a favourite method of the Exchequer for balancing out the customers' surplusses. However, there is at least one case of transferral of a surplus onto the Pipe Roll in order to cancel out a customs account debit: TNA: PRO, E356/19 m 6d and E372/289 Bristoll'.

¹³⁷ It is perhaps not altogether otiose to point out that the membranes of the Pipe Roll were bound in the alphabetical order of the county names in Latin. If more than one membrane was required for the county (this was usually the case in our period), then they were designated (at the foot of the dorse) as London' (m 1), Item London' (m 2), Adhuc Item London' (m 3), Item Adhuc Item London' (m 4), Residuum London' (m 5), counting contained in the Enrolled Customs Accounts. With this entry the accounting record in the Enrolled Customs Accounts came to an end, since the customers' debt (or surplus) had been transferred from one of the supplementary Pipe Rolls (which was what, in the end, the Enrolled Customs Accounts were) onto the Pipe Roll itself. It was superfluous to keep a redundant second record of the remainder of the accounting procedure.

Nonetheless, the Exchequer still had to see to it that the customers paid their debts to the crown. With the transfer of the debt to the Pipe Rolls, the responsibility for summoning passed from the Lord Treasurer's Remembrancer to the Clerk of the Estreats (clericus ad extractas in magno scaccario transcribendas), since it was no longer the customers, but the sheriff who had to be summoned.¹³⁸ If the sheriff was unable to obtain payment from the customers the first time around, then responsibility for issuing all further writs – called Summons of the Pipe (summoniciones pipe) – passed to the Controller of the Pipe Roll (contrarotulator magni rotuli). Irrespective of who was responsible for issuing the writs, the Exchequer's procedure was unvarying. The moment the customers or the sheriff paid over any money at all, the entire procedure of checking tallies against counter-tallies and/or of dealing with petitions for allocation and exoneration was set in motion once again. In the end, when the entire debt was paid off, the Clerk of the Pipe issued a breve de quieto, which freed the customers from all further action by the Exchequer. With that, the accounting procedure was truly completed.

Item Residuum London' (m 6), Adhuc Item Residuum London' (m 7) etc.

¹³⁸ These summons were called 'Summons of the Green Wax' (summoniciones cere viride), since they were sealed with green wax. They were issued exclusively for new debts and then handed over by the Clerk of the Estreats to the summonitor of the Exchequer (whom the sources occasionally designate as a clerk of the Chancellor of the Exchequer). The summonitor passed them on to the Usher of the Upper Exchequer (hostiarius magni scaccarii), who sealed them and handed them over to the individual sheriffs or to the Exchequer's messengers for delivery to the sheriffs. On this see TNA: PRO, E207/18/4 unnumbered. At the end of each term, the usher (hostiarius) was reimbursed for the costs of sealing and delivering the writs: TNA: PRO, E403, where on the last membrane of each term these costs are totalled under the heading Liberaciones camerariorum et aliorum ministeriorum tam de magno scaccario quam de recepta scaccarii. For the sealing and delivery fees see Hall, Red Book, vol. 3, p. 835-8.

DIPLOMATIC NOTES ON THE FORM OF THE EDITION

The transcriptions of Latin documents in this edition observe the conventions of the Monumenta Germaniae Historica. The source texts (and all variants) are reproduced in normal type, whilst editorial intrusions are printed without exception in italics (e.g. mardre L3, in error). Unambiguous abbreviations are expanded silently (i.e. without use of square brackets or italics to indicate missing letters). u/v and i/j have been regularized silently to accord with pronunciation: thus vniuersalis in the source text is rendered universalis, whilst ‘i’ is transcribed if the letter is pronounced as a vowel (imperii), and ‘j’ if the letter is pronounced as a consonant, i.e. like the ‘y’ in ‘you’ (majestas), even if the source writes imperij and maiestas.

Personal names and place names are transcribed exactly as written and only regularized in the Index of People and Places.

Roman numerals are reproduced as Arabic numerals, except for the sovereign’s ordinal (Henrici vijth). Arabic numerals which occur in the source texts are indicated by bold type. ob’ is given as ½d, q’ as ¼d and ob’ q’ as ¾d.

When transcribing the customs accounts, I have numbered the ships consecutively in italics in square brackets. The individual paragraphs of longer texts have also been numbered in the same way. The reason for this is that the digital version of the accounts has no pagination, since the amount of text displayed on the screen depends on the size of the monitor and its resolution. Consequently, cross references – whether within a single document, from one document to another or in the indices – to ‘page thus-and-such’ are meaningless, and some internal sub-division of the text which can be linked in is unavoidable. Since some scholars will want to use the printed version of the edition and others the digital edition, it is necessary to provide a common basis. Thus, if one scholar refers to ship No. 24 in the digital version of a particular account, those using the printed version will be able to find the vessel in question.

All dates and cross references in the source texts have been resolved in italics in square brackets in the text of the edition, rather than in footnotes.

Note that in resolving return days, I have noted the first date only, relying upon the reader to be aware of the fact that a given return day covers more than one day.¹

¹ C.R. Cheney, Michael Jones (eds.), A Handbook of Dates for Students of British History (Royal Historical Society Guides and Handbooks 4), 2nd ed., Cambridge 2000, p. 99, 105-6.

If both the particulars of account and the controlment roll survive, certain variants have been suppressed to avoid inflating the text-critical apparatus. Thus, neither the substitution of 'y' in one text for 'i' in the other (e.g. Willyamson, Williamson) nor middle English plural variants (-es, -is, -ys etc.) have been noted in the apparatus criticus. In general, I have limited the notation of textual variants to those cases in which the variant spelling of a word changes the pronunciation. Thus, the variant federbeds will be noted against fetherbeds, but not fedderbeds or federbeddes against federbeds.

Punctuation is artificial and ignores all medieval full stops, commas and so forth. Since Latin is a syntactic language (like German), the eminently useful MGH convention – namely to employ punctuation (according to the pre-reform German rules) to mark up the grammatical structure of the sentence – has been employed here. I have also broken up the stylistically elegant, but utterly incomprehensible run-on Latin sentences of the source texts into manageable units.

The reader will note that all documents in the parcelle compoti of the three accounts and some documents in the subsidiary documents are calendared in English. The reason for this is that, as Hunnisett states, documents embodying routine administrative matters should not be transcribed in full.² There can be no doubt that this is the case with the parcelle compoti. For instance, the entire story of Henry IV's grant of 4d per diem in alms to Christine Houchon is told in two writs issued to the customers, ordering them to pay Houchon for the half year in question (P 6, P 7, p. 197-8), again in two writs issued to the Exchequer, ordering it to exonerate the customers on proof of payment (P 4, P 5, p. 196-7), in both receipts Houchon issued (P 8, P 9, p. 198) and in the enrolled account (A 4, § 12, p. 210).³ Nor is there anything to be learned from the full Latin text of 21 receipts issued by John Wygmore in the name of Richard, duke of York, acknowledging payments on York's annuity, since these receipts are identical but for the date and the amount. Such routine administrative matters may be confidently calendared. However, I have adhered to certain rules, reproducing portions of the original Latin text for the following categories of information in the documents: 1) the date and the information about the seal (in diplomatics: the corroboratio); 2) all annotations at the foot and on the dorse of the document; 3) proper names; 4) anything particularly significant (especially if it gives an indication of Exchequer procedures), ambiguous or obscure.

Since we are dealing with late medieval administrative Latin, there are some cases which call for local by-laws.

² R.H. Hunnisett, Editing Records for Publication (British Records Association: Archives and the User 4), London 1977, p. 15.

First of all, there are a number of middle English words embedded in the Latin texts which have to be assigned a gender, since they are often modified by an abbreviated adjective (e.g. pro 1 parv' fetherbed). Since the adjectives are written out in a number of instances (pro 1 parvo fetherbed), I have treated middle English words as masculine rather than litter the edition with apostrophes.

Second, the sources themselves are in a muddle as to whether the words custuma and subsidium are singular or plural, and usually avoid the problem by writing cust' and subs'. If a scribe does write out the one or the other word, it is almost inevitable that he will contradict himself, writing custuma in one line and custume a few lines later. This muddle is not merely the result of scribal carelessness or the contemporaneous low standard of Latinity. In the fifteenth century, it was possible to differentiate between the collective noun (in the singular) denoting the charges to be paid and the individual sums (in the plural) which each merchant rendered. Even bearing this in mind, however, scribes are simply not consistent. Taking each individual text as a whole, I have done my best to reproduce what the scribe seemed to be thinking.

[S 2] Henry VI to the treasurer and barons of the Exchequer: since Richard II – at the request of the commons and with the assent of the lords and the council in the parliament meeting in Westminster on 12 Nov. 1390² – raised his uncle Edmund [of Langley] to be duke of York, he promised to provide him with lands and rents worth £1000 yearly heritable in tail male (over and above all earlier grants made by Edward III) in order to maintain his station, and granted him various annuities – £400 yearly, payable from the issues of the wool customs and subsidy in Hull, and £289 6s 8d yearly, payable from the issues of the wool customs and subsidy in London at Easter and Michaelmas in equal portions, with the remainder of the said £1000 being payable at the Exchequer – until such time as lands yielding the said £1000 yearly could be assigned to him; and since an inquisition³ held before Nicholas Wotton, formerly

² The duchy had been created on 6 Aug. 1385 (CChR 1341-1417, p. 300), at which time Edmund had been granted a total of £1000 (with the remainder to his heirs male) to maintain his station (£100 from the issues of Yorkshire, £400 from the issues of the wool customs and subsidy in Hull and £500 from the issues of the wool customs and subsidy in London: CPR 1385-89, p. 62). Since Edmund had been unable to obtain payment of these annuities, as he stated in his petition to parliament, Richard II ordered the issue of a new charter on 12 Nov. 1390 (CChR 1341-1417, p. 323, with incorrect date '1391'), to which parliament assented (Rotuli Parliamentorum, vol. 3, p. 278).

³ Nicholas Wotton was mayor and ex officio escheator of London in 1415/16: Alfred B. Beaven (ed.), The Aldermen of the City of London, temp. Henry III-1908, vol. 2, London 1913, p. 2. The writ diem clausit extremum was issued on 30 Oct. 1415, and the corresponding inquisition was held in London on 20 Jan. 1416: John L. Kirby (ed.), Calendar of inquisitions post mortem and other analogous documents preserved in the Public Record Office, vol. 20: 1-5 Henry V (1413-1418), London 1995, No. 391, p. 118-

mayor and escheator of London, found that Edmund had possessed the said annuity on the day of his death [1 Aug. 1402] and that it had passed to his son Edward, whereby Edmund's widow Joan had been assigned one third (£96 8s 10½d) of the annuity in dower, and that Richard, the present duke of York, as the son of Edward's brother Richard was the next heir; and since an inquisition⁴ held before John Perneys, formerly mayor and escheator of London,⁵ had found that Edward's widow Philippa had possessed one third (£64 5s 11d) of Edward's portion of the said annuity in dower on the day of her death and that the reversion of the said portion of the annuity (together with the other properties which Edward had possessed on the day of his death [25 Oct. 1415]) belonged to the present duke of York as the next heir; and the said inquisition also found that † Edmund, earl of March, had possessed various lands – in part as tenant in chief – on the day of his death [18 Jan. 1415] and that the reversion of these lands belonged to the present duke of York, who was the son of Edmund's sister; moreover, while various inquisitions⁶ had proved that the present duke of York had reached his majority, this did not hold true of the inquisitions held upon the death of the earl of March [in 1425] and duke Edward [in 1415]; since, however, the inquisitions held upon the death of duke Edward and of his widow Philippa were not fully taken or returned into the chancery, the present duke cannot sue and have his livery of the properties in the king's hand by reason of his minority without the king's special favour; therefore the king – in view of the fact that the present duke has reached his majority, the fact that the said lands had become waste during the time they were in the king's hands and of the loyal service of the present duke in England and France – on 12 May 1432 granted⁷ livery of the inheritance of the house of York (including the properties Philippa held in dower) – fealty and homage being respited – and ordered the mayor and escheator of London to release those portions of the inheritance in London to the present duke; and since a later inquisition⁸ held before John Brokley, formerly mayor and escheator of London, found that Edmund's widow Joan had possessed one third (£96 8s 10½d) of the said annuity on the day of her death and that the reversion of this portion belonged to the present duke, the king granted livery of this portion of the inheritance on 25 June 1434⁹ and directed the escheator of London to release to the present duke the portion of the inheritance which Joan had possessed in dower and which had come into the king's hands by reason of Joan's death, homage and fealty being respited; and since the king has ordered [mandate untraceable] the collectors of the wool customs and subsidy in London to pay the present duke all arrears of Edward's portion of the said annuity (£192 17s 9½d yearly) owing from 12 May 1432 and all arrears of Joan's portion of the said annuity (£96 8s 10½d yearly) owing since 25 June 1434 and all sums which shall fall due in the future by reason of the whole annuity (£289 6s 8d yearly); the king orders the Exchequer to allow the customers all payments made in this regard when they account, provided they produce the mandate for payment directed to them and the receipts of the present duke; should, however, the issues of the wool customs and subsidy in London not suffice for the said payments, the Exchequer is ordered to make up the difference. — 1439 Dec. 26. [A 1] The Exchequer directs the London sheriffs to distrain John Melbourne and William Chattok (customers) as well as John Cotteford (controller) in order that they appear before the Exchequer on 30 Sept. 1446, the customers to account for the issues of the petty customs during their term of office and the controller to fulfill his office. On that date the sheriffs returned the writ, indicating that they had distrained the customers and the controller, who indeed appeared personally, swore to account faithfully and were assigned Richard Bedford as their auditor. Since the accounting procedure could not be completed in Michaelmas term, it was continued until 27 Jan. 1447 (in Hilary term) and completed then. — 1446 Juni 26.

[S 1] *Henry VI to the treasurer and barons of the Exchequer: since the king wishes to repay the £10,426 4¼d which John, earl of Shrewsbury (Salopie), lord Talbot and de Furnyvale loaned to the crown, he has – by patent¹ issued on 3 Dec. 1443 (tercio die Decembris anno regni nostri vicesimo secundo) – granted him 300 marks sterling yearly, payable in equal portions at Easter and Michaelmas from the issues of tunnage and poundage in London, until the debt is repaid. This grant is, however, only valid once the king's debt of £21,000 owing to his uncle, Henry, cardinal of England and bishop of Winchester, has been repaid. Since the king has now learned that this latter debt has indeed been repaid and has accordingly directed the collectors of tunnage and poundage in London to pay the earl of Shrewsbury all sums owing from Michaelmas term last (pro termino sancti Michaelis ultimo preterito), he orders the Exchequer to allocate (debite allocetis) any payments these customers might have made in this regard when the customers come to account, providing they produce this writ of payment and Shrewsbury's receipts (litteras acquietancie). — 1445 Feb. 12 (Teste me ipso apud Westmonasterium, 12^{mo} die Februarii anno regni nostri vicesimo tercio). APPENDIX I

HOW DID THE CROWN PAY?

It is one of the many conundra which bedevil studies of the medieval Exchequer that no one has systematically investigated such a seemingly simple question as the administrative mechanics of how the crown paid out money to its creditors. The best study is still Willard's analysis of the period 1290 to 1334 with regard to the collectors of parliamentary subsidies,¹ which draws together the conclusions of a number of his articles.

Willard distinguishes two methods of payment, the Writ and Letter system and the Writ and Tally system. The first came into effect once the Exchequer gained control over disbursements in 1294 and the second in the early fourteenth century. In both cases, payment was initiated by some form of crown warrant for issue – whether by order under the Great or Privy Seal or wardrobe bill – which constituted proof of crown indebtedness and communicated this state of affairs to the Exchequer. This posed the question to the Exchequer of whether it was prepared to pay cash. If not – as was usually the case, since the government was chronically short of liquid funds – the debt was assigned.²

In the Writ and Letter system, the crown warrant generated an Exchequer writ³ directed to some official responsible for collecting crown revenue who was informed of the reason for payment, ordered to pay a beneficiary named in the writ and to obtain some form of receipt, usually specified as a patent letter

¹ James F. Willard, Parliamentary Taxes on Personal Property 1290 to 1334. A Study in Mediaeval English Financial Administration (Publications of the Mediaeval Academy of America 9), Cambridge/Mass. 1934 repr. 1970, p. 230-49.

² Administratively, it made no difference whether funds were disbursed in cash to the payee at the Exchequer in Westminster or paid directly to him in the field in return for his receipt, which was subsequently presented to the Exchequer. In the first case (from 1332/33 onwards), the issue roll distinguished between cash payments and assignments by marginating sol' or soluc' against the entry as opposed to assign': Anthony Steel, The Receipt of the Exchequer 1377-1485, Cambridge/Engl. 1954, p. xxxi. Between 1336 and 1349, the receipt rolls began to make the same distinction, marginating sol' for cash payments into the Exchequer and a pro entry for proof of payment on an assignment: ibid.

³ Although originally both Remembrancers enrolled Exchequer writs in their Memoranda Rolls, the task was delegated more or less completely to the King's Remembrancer by the Exchequer reforms of 1323, who copied them in the Brevia irretornabilia section of his Memoranda Roll: Willard, Parliamentary Taxes, p. 238.

sealed by the payee. In addition, the official was assured that the sum in question would be allowed in his account at the Exchequer. Around the beginning of the fourteenth century – Willard's first example dates from 8 Edward II (1314/15) – the wording of the allowance clause became more specific: The official was now assured that upon presentation of the Exchequer's writ of assignment and the patent letter of the payee at the Exchequer a tally would be levied which would suffice for allowance at accounting. This change of wording, Willard emphasizes, did not indicate any substantial change in procedure. Not stated as such in the writ, but demonstrable from practice was the fact that the issuance of the tally generated an entry in the receipt rolls crediting the official with the amount named in the tally and the writ.⁴ Note that in the Writ and Letter system the Exchequer's writ of assignment would be dated well before the time the tally was struck and the entry in the receipt rolls effected.

In the early fourteenth century (between 1306 and 1319), a second system of effecting payments came into use: the Writ and Tally system. As in the Writ and Letter system, the crown warrant generated an Exchequer writ directed to some official who was ordered to pay the beneficiary and receive from him the Exchequer writ and – this was new – a tally levied by the Exchequer in the official's name for the stated amount. This tally, the writ stated, would be sufficient for allowance of the sum in question. Finally, the warranty clause – which specified the authority on which the Exchequer writ was issued – included one of a number of variations mentioning tallies – 'by the treasurer and a tally of the Exchequer', 'by a writ of liberate and a tally', 'by the treasurer and the issue roll', 'by a tally and the issue roll at the receipt' and so forth.⁵ Here (as before) the Exchequer writ generated an entry in the receipt rolls of even date (or, if the Exchequer was very busy, of a slightly later date) crediting the official with payment. What was new was that the writ of assignment also generated an entry in the issue roll showing payment by the official to the beneficiary. Note that under the Writ and Tally system the dates of issuance of the Exchequer writ, of the striking of the tally (as recorded in the receipt rolls) and of the corresponding entry in the issue rolls were very close to one another, whereas in the Writ and Letter System the date of the striking of the tally (and the receipt roll entry) was considerably later than the date of issuance of the Exchequer writ (and the issue roll entry), the former only being effected when the official came into Westminster to account. Digramm 1 illustrates the two systems.

⁴ Willard, Parliamentary Taxes, p. 230-35.

⁵ Willard, Parliamentary Taxes, p. 237-38, 273-74. The warranty clause in the Writ and Letter system mentioned writs under the great or privy seal, a writ of liberate or the treasurer himself, but never a tally.

It will be seen that the only difference between the two systems was that in the Writ and Tally system the tally was levied p r i o r to payment of the beneficiary, whereas in the Writ and Letter system it was not struck until the official came into Westminster to account, in other words long a f t e r payment had been made. In both instances, the tally served the Upper Exchequer as proof of payment. In the Writ and Tally system it also served as the receipt of the payee acknowledging payment, since it was not handed over to the official until payment had been effected. According to Willard, this simplified accounting procedure: The official did not have to visit the Exchequer of Receipt, but could proceed directly to the Upper Exchequer to account.

For the period he investigates, Willard's conclusions may be readily confirmed. Since he largely, if not wholly, translates from the Latin, it is instructive to take a closer look at the original text of two typical Exchequer writs, one of each type. The mandate to pay Thomas de Bradeston⁶ dated 4 October 1340 is a good example of the Writ and Letter system.

We note that here, as Willard states, a royal writ under the great seal (6) actuated the treasurer, Roger Northburgh,⁸ to send an Exchequer writ to Walter de Meryet, receiver of the Ninth in Exeter (1), who is given the reason for payment to Thomas de Bradeston (2), ordered to pay Thomas or his attorney (3) and receive his patent letter of receipt (4), upon presentation of which – and by reason of the present Exchequer writ – tallies will be levied at the Exchequer in Walter's name (5) which will suffice for allowance when he accounted.

The Writ and Tally system is illustrated by the following example, in which the collectors of the clerical Tenth were ordered to pay the Nottingham merchant William de Amyas £150.⁹

We note that here, again as Willard states, a royal writ under the privy seal (6) actuated the treasurer, Robert de Sadyngton, to send an Exchequer writ to the collectors of the clerical tenth in the archdeaconry of Nottingham (1), who were ordered to pay William Amyas (2) and given the reason for payment (3), receiving the Exchequer tally struck in their names for the sum in question in advance of payment (4), which will be allocated to them when they account (5).

Needless to say, numerous examples of each system of payment can be found in the King's Remembrancer's Memoranda Rolls, and nothing I or other scholars have found vitiates Willard's conclusions for the period 1290 to 1334. However, Willard did not pursue the subject beyond the year of the last direct assessment of parliamentary subsidies, and developments in later years escaped his cognizance. Two of these are relevant for our question. First, Willard's statement that 'many, if not most, of the collectors within our period came to Westminster with writs and letters patent of receipt' is only correct for his period of investigation.¹¹ As Larson shows,¹² the preponderance of the Writ and Letter system characteristic of the years up to 1333/34 was reversed during the ensuing five years and made a comeback in the next five years (Graph 1). Second, enrolments of Exchequer writs became rare from 1348/49 and disappeared altogether from 1353/54 onwards,¹³ in the same year that the brevia irretornabilia section of the King's Remembrancer's Memoranda Roll was dropped. Although it was revived in a fashion at the beginning of Richard II's reign – when the brevia retornabilia section was styled brevia retornabilia et irretornabilia –, the newly entitled section did not include any Exchequer writs of assignment,¹⁴ and they do not seem to have been enrolled anywhere else in either Memoranda Roll.

This poses a serious problem for the investigation of the administrative mechanics of how the crown paid out money to its creditors in the period from 1392/93 to 1462/63. Are we to conclude that the Exchequer no longer ordered payment by royal officials? If so, who did: the chancellor, the keeper of the privy seal or the king himself? Was the Exchequer informed, or did the king and various departments simply order payment by assignment without overall control?

In order to solve the conundrum, it seems best to examine the various types of accounting documents one by one and see what light they throw upon the problem. The Enrolled Customs Accounts (and the Pipe Rolls) do contribute to our knowledge, but do not resolve all difficulties. Clearly, they show that there were two methods by which payments were effected. The first, which always follows immediately upon the summa recepte, was by tally. The following entry, taken from the wool customs and subsidy account of John Poutrell and Thomas Pound for 24 Henry VI, shows just how frustratingly brief these entries are:

The second method of effecting payment – which follows immediately upon the tally entry – consistently names a royal patent letter as warrant, includes a cross-reference to a breve de allocate produced in the chancery¹⁷ addressed to the treasurer and barons (and copied in the brevia directa baronibus section of the King’s Remembrancer’s Memoranda Roll) and cites one or more receipts from the beneficiary as proof of payment. When the parcelle compoti are transmitted, we also find a breve de liberate directed to the customers themselves ordering them to pay the beneficiary a specific sum.¹⁸ If the parcelle compoti bundle has survived intact, all documents are found sewn together in the order breve de allocate, breve de liberate, receipt(s).

On the face of it, then, it would seem that the Writ and Tally system had survived, but that the Writ and Letter system had been modified. Instead of an Exchequer writ directed to the royal official – attested by the treasurer and sealed with the Exchequer seal –, we now have a mandate for payment (breve de liberate) directed to the official, attested by the king himself and sealed with the great seal, which was communicated in substance to the Exchequer (breve de allocate) and ordered it to allow the customers any payments demonstrably made by authority of the breve de liberate. Proof of payment was one or more receipts sealed by the beneficiary.

THE TALLY SYSTEM

The entries in the Enrolled Customs Accounts (and the Pipe Rolls) are, as seen above, maddeningly brief. More detailed information about the tallies presented by the customers is contained in some, if not all of the visus compoti. Let us take as an example the visus of the Lynn customers John Bukworth and John Bokenham for the period Michaelmas 4 Henry V (1416) to 14 January 1417.¹⁹ The customers had been distrained to appear at the beginning of Hilary term, on 14 Jan. of 4 Henry V (1417),²⁰ and the visus was taken in that term.

¹⁶ Wool account for 24 Henry VI, No. A 3 § 12.

The customers charged themselves with a total of £999 23d. Against this, they reckoned the following tallies:

- | | |
|--|-------------|
| [1] 1 talliam levatam 20 die Decembris anno tercio [20 Dec. 1415] pro hospicio domini regis de custuma lanarum | £66 13s 4d |
| [2] 1 aliam talliam levatam 23 die Januarii dicto anno tercio [23 Jan. 1416] pro eodem hospicio de eadem custuma | £48 9s 6½d |
| [3-4] 2 tallias levatas 21 die Junii dicto anno tercio [21 June 1415] pro villa regis Calesie de subsidio lanarum | £670 4s 3½d |
| [5] 1 aliam talliam levatam 10 ^{mo} die Augusti anno quarto [10 Aug. 1416] pro dicto hospicio continentem £100 de subsidio 12d de £ | £40 |
| [6] 1 aliam talliam [levatam] 23 die Januarii dicto anno tercio [23 Jan. 1416] pro dicto hospicio | £43 10s 6d |
| [7] 1 talliam levatam tercio die Februarii dicto anno quarto [3 Feb. 1417] ad receptam scaccarii de custuma lanarum | 3s 10d |
| [8] 1 aliam talliam levatam eisdem die et anno [3 Feb. 1417] ibidem de parva custuma | 20s 1½d |
| [9] 1 aliam talliam levatam eisdem die et anno [3 Feb. 1417] ibidem de subsidio 12d de libra | 2s |

Now, quite clearly, the tallies Bukworth and Bokenham presented in Hilary term of 1417 fall into two groups: old tallies (No. 1-6) which had been levied five to eighteen months prior to the beginning of Hilary term in 1417 and very recent tallies (No. 7-9) which had all been levied during Hilary term 1417 itself (on 3 February), and indeed, as the visus notes, at the Exchequer of Receipt. The conclusion is inescapable that the recent tallies represent cash payments at the Exchequer of Receipt upon arrival of the customers for the visus. It seems equally clear that the old tallies had been handed over to the customers in receipt of payment. However, no further information is given. In particular, we have no indication of how – and by whom and in what form – the customers were ordered to pay. Consequently, we also have no idea of what the customers brought into the Exchequer when they appeared for a visus or final accounting. This is particularly worrying, because it would have been highly uncharacteristic of the Exchequer not to enroll – or at least file – accounting documents.

The solution to the puzzle is deceptively simple: The tally alone was perfectly adequate as a mandate for the customers to pay a beneficiary, whose possession of the tally struck in the Exchequer was sufficient proof of his right to receive payment. Since the tally was by its nature a receipt made out to a particular person (or persons) for a specific amount of money, there was no need for the customers to profer any further documents in proof of payment when they came to Westminster for accounting, since the tally had been made out in their names at the outset.

It would seem, therefore, that the old Writ and Tally system had been simplified by dropping the writ, leaving only the tally. As was the case before 1353/54, a royal warrant for issue, directed to the treasurer and chamberlains, initiated the process of payment. Once it arrived in the Exchequer of Receipt, the warrant generated an entry on the issue roll recording disbursement of funds to the payee and – if the Exchequer was unable or unwilling to pay cash – the levying of a tally in assignment and a corresponding entry on the receipt roll recording payment by the official.²¹ The tally was then handed over to the payee, who presented it in due course to the royal official whose name was inscribed on the tally and entered in the receipt roll. Once the official had paid the sum in question, the beneficiary handed over the tally²² which the official then presented to the Exchequer of Receipt when he came in to account. If both halves of the tally matched up, proof of payment was complete and the corresponding sum was allowed to the official, the tallies being filed.

This procedure is illustrated by a rather famous warrant for issue, by which Henry VII ordered payment of John Cabot's annuity of £20 per annum on 22 February 1498. Even if the warrant has been published repeatedly, it is useful to reproduce the text here.²³

²² One should note that partial payments of tallies do occur, although they are by the logic of the system impossible: The visus of John Bukworth and John Bukenham for the issues of tunnage and poundage in Lynn in the period from 14 Jan. to 1 May 1417 – taken in Easter term 1417 – contains two: De quibus [£119 7s 2½d] iidem collectores computant in denariis solutis ad receptam hujus scaccarii in partem solucionis unius tallie continentis £100 nuper assignate thesaurario hospicii regis super expensis ejusdem hospicii ultra £40 per ipsos collectores alias eidem thesaurario solutas, prout in visu compoti eorundem collectorum in custodia remembratoris regis remanente plenius apparet — £40; Et in denariis solutis ad eandem receptam in partem solucionis alterius tallie levate 24^{to} die Januarii anno tercio [24 Jan. 1416] continentis £79 16s 2d nuper assignate Thome Chaucer capitali pincerne regis super expensis officii sui per acquietanciam ipius Thome super hunc visum ostensam et penes ipsos collectores remanentem — £64: TNA: PRO, E159/193 fines ... visus Easter m [1d]: http://aalt.law.uh.edu/H5/E159no193/bE159no193dorses/IMG_1150.htm.

Note that, in this warrant for issue under the privy seal, the king orders the treasurer and chamberlains to cause a tally for £10 – bearing the names of the Bristol customers Richard Meryk and Arthur Kemys²⁵ – to be struck and handed over to Cabot to cover the arrears of his annuity – which the customers had refused to disburse – and further tallies to be struck in due course for each half-yearly payment as it should fall due. No other form of documentation was mentioned. Nor was any necessary: As the king states, the privy seal warrant itself shal be youre sufficient warrant in that behalf. The Enrolled Account of the Bristol customers for the period 29 September 1497 to 29 September 1498 records payment by tally in the same – maddeningly brief – form as that of Poutrell and Pound for the wool customs and subsidy in 24 Henry VI had done:

Et in thesauro £20 10^{mo} die Maii anno 14^{mo} [10 May 1499] per dictos nuper collectores de eisdem custumis et subsidiis pro Johanne Caboot²⁶

Now, it might be objected that it is all well and good to demonstrate that the Tally system – as I shall designate it for lack of a better term – was in force at the end of the fifteenth century, but what of the intervening 150 years? Is there sufficient evidence to prove – or at least plausibly suggest – that it was in operation between 1392/93 and 1462/63? Needless to say, I am persuaded that this was the case, but the reader should be aware that I have not conducted an exhaustive investigation of the warrants for issue, examining their dorsal entries and matching them to the entries in the issue and receipt rolls. That – and only that – would constitute incontrovertible proof that the Tally system was in operation. Therefore, the reader should bear in mind that my results are preliminary.

There can be no doubt that the crown issued large numbers of warrants for issue during our period, ordering the treasurer and chamberlains to make payments of one sort or another.²⁷ Whether the Exchequer paid cash or assigned the sum can be determined by examining the dorse of the warrant for issue. Henry VI's privy seal warrant dated 11 July 1444,²⁸ directing the treasurer and chamberlains to pay 100 marks to the envoys of the Rhenish palgrave Louis III demonstrates this clearly:

Henri par la grace de Dieu roy dEngleterre et de France et seigneur dIrlande as tresorer et chamberlains de nostre eschequier salut. Nous volons de ladvis de nostre counsail et vous mandons, qe a noz bien amez maistre Nicholas de Wachenhem docteur en divinitee et a Herman de Rubeto ambassadeurs de nostre trescher et tresame cousin le duc de Bayer, lesquels sount par luy a nous envoiez pour avoir receuz de nous certaines sommes de monnoie, qi sont par nous a luy duez, vous facez delivere en partie de paiement de lesdictes sommes cent marcs. Doun soubz nostre prive seal a Westminster, le 11 jour de Juyl lan de nostre regne vynt secoude. Benet

While the king only ordered the treasurer and chamberlains to pay, leaving to them the decision of how to do so, the entry of the words Persolutum in denariis hoc termino on the dorse of the warrant permits no doubt that payment was made in cash.

On the other hand, the Exchequer might, and usually did decide to pay by assignment, and here, too, the dorsal entry must be consulted. Henry VI's order dated 2 July 1440, ordering the treasurer and chamberlains to pay the Hanseatic merchants Henry Overbagh and Johan Bernefrois £20 for 400 spear shafts purchased on 14 October 1435 by the king's sergeant of artillery John Stanley,²⁹ bears the dorsal entry Persolutum per assignacionem hoc termino. Maddenly, many warrants for issue have only Persolutum on the dorse, which does indicate any particular form of payment. In order to find out just how the sum in question was paid, one would have to consult the issue and receipt rolls. The issue rolls generally differentiate between payment in cash (in denariis sibi liberatis) and by assignment (in denariis sibi liberatis per assignacionem) in the text of the entry.³⁰ The receipt rolls are more informative, since there the right-hand margin contains one of two annotations: sol' (for cash payments into the Receipt) and pro followed by the name of a payee and a reason for payment (in the case of assignments), while a dot marginated to the left of the entry indicates that a tally had been struck. Although I have not conducted a systematic investigation of all payments by tally effected by the customers who accounted in my ten year steps, as recorded in the Enrolled Customs Accounts, I think it is reasonable to record a Nihil obstat as a preliminary conclusion: Nothing I have found so far prohibits us from concluding that the Writ and Tally system had been supplanted by the Tally system.

This conclusion is supported by a number of literary complaints about royal purveyors paying for goods with sticks rather than money.³¹ However, the argument which, to my mind, clinches the case is the dishonoured tally which was allegedly levied on 14 Nov. 1452, which directed payment of £46 13s 3d out of the London wool customs and subsidy to the royal household.³² The record in the King's Remembrancer's Memoranda Roll states that the tally was examined by the barons and found to be counterfeit, presumably because the counterfoil could not be found, although this is not stated explicitly. At no point in the case was reference made to any other document for which a fruitless search was conducted, although one would expect such a statement if, in fact, the Writ and Tally system were still in operation. After all, counterfoils could, theoretically, be misfiled or lost, and if an Exchequer writ directing the London customers to pay £46 13s 3d to the household was in fact in existence – whether on file or in copy –, then one would have expected that the barons would have ordered a search to be made and that the record would state that no such writ was found. Since the record in the King's Remembrancer's Memoranda Roll is silent on this point, I feel emboldened to conclude that the Writ and Tally system had in fact been replaced by the Tally system.

THE WRIT AND LETTER SYSTEM IN THE FIFTEENTH CENTURY

The second method of payment employed by the crown is much better documented, and there can be no doubt as to the procedure which was followed. If we again consult the wool customs and subsidy account for 24 Henry VI, we find – immediately following the tally entry – a number of entries which (1) consistently name a royal patent letter as warrant, (2) include a cross-reference to a breve de allocate produced in the chancery and addressed to the treasurer and barons (and copied in the brevia directa baronibus section of the King's Remembrancer's Memoranda Roll) and (3) cite one or more receipts from the beneficiary as proof of payment. Whenever the parcelle compoti are transmitted without loss, we also find a breve de liberate directed to the customers ordering them to pay the beneficiary a certain sum of money.³³ If the parcelle compoti bundle has survived intact, all documents are found sewn together in the order breve de allocate, breve de liberate, receipt(s).

Let us take a specific example to illustrate this. The Enrolled Account of the collectors of the petty customs in London William de Lunes and Thomas Chynnore for the period from 10 May to 29 Sept. 1440 records the disbursement of £20 to Simon Camp, esq., for Michaelmas term 19 Henry VI (1440/41) in part payment of his annuity of £40.³⁴

[1] Et Simoni Camp armigero, [2] cui dominus Henricus nuper rex Anglie Quartus per litteras suas patentes, quas rex nunc 14^{mo} die Decembris anno primo [14 Dec. 1422] confirmavit,³⁵ concessit quadraginta libras percipiendas annuatim durante vita sua de parva custuma regis trium denariorum de libra in portu predicto per manus collectorum ejusdem custume pro tempore existencium ad terminos sancti Michaelis et Pasche per equales porciones, [3] £20 de termino Michaelis anno 19^{mo} [4] per breve regis irrotulatum in memorandis de anno 19^{mo} regis hujus termino sancti Michaelis rotulo 38^o [TNA: PRO, E159/217 Brevia directa baronibus Michaelmas m 38] et [5] litteras patentes ipsius Simonis de recepta.

Note that the entry begins by naming the payee (1) and citing Henry VI's confirmation (on 14 Dec. 1422) of Henry IV's patent granting Camp £40 per annum for life, payable from the petty customs in London at Michaelmas and Easter in equal portions, as warrant for all such payments (2). It then notes how much was paid in Michaelmas term 19 Henry VI (3), refers to the king's writ enrolled in the King's Remembrancer's Memoranda Roll in the Brevia directa baronibus section for Michaelmas 19 Henry VI as warrant for this particular payment (4) and cites Camp's sealed receipt as proof of payment (5).

Now, the parcelle compoti for this account have survived as an original bundle.³⁶ Here we find the breve de allocate (Illustration 1a) dated 2 October 1440 and attested by the chancery clerk Richard Selby³⁷ and Camp's receipt (Illustration 1c) dated 10 November 1440, which we would have expected from the entry in the Enrolled Customs Accounts. We also find the breve de liberate (Illustration 1b) dated 1 October 1440 and also attested by Selby, which the Enrolled Account did not mention. In addition, we note that the breve de allocate has a hole between the second and third lines, clearly indicating that it was spindled in the Exchequer awaiting the customers' presentation of the breve de liberate and the receipt after payment had been completed. Finally, we note that all three documents are sewn together in the bundle in the order breve de allocate, breve de liberate and receipt.³⁸

Now, these three documents illustrate the procedure with perfect clarity. Ultimately, a royal patent – originally issued by Henry IV on 3 September 1401³⁹ and confirmed by Henry V on 14 April 1414⁴⁰ and Henry VI on 14 December 1422⁴¹ – was the warrant for payment of each half-yearly instalment of Simon Camp's annuity. At the beginning of each half year, the chancery produced first a breve de liberate under the great seal⁴² (here on 1 October 1440) di-

³⁹ CPR 1399-1401, p. 535.

⁴⁰ CPR 1413-16, p. 193.

⁴¹ CPR 1422-29, p. 10-11.

⁴² These brevia must have been issued under the great seal, since they are not folded like privy seal writs. After the customers handed the writ in at the Exchequer, the tongue was torn away and the wax re-used. The tear is obvious on a number of writs.

rected to the customers and attested by a chancery clerk, ordering them to pay Camp his half-yearly instalment, and handed it over to Camp, who was then free to seek out the customers and try to obtain payment. More or less simultaneously (here on 2 October 1440), the chancery directed a breve de allocate to the treasurer and barons under the great seal⁴³ also attested by the same chancery clerk, ordering them to allow the customers any payments they had made in consequence of the breve de liberate, provided they produce that writ and the payee's receipt(s). This writ was enrolled in the brevia directa baronibus section of the King's Remembrancer's Memoranda Roll for 19 Henry VI on m 38 of Michaelmas term, as the entry on the dorse of the breve de allocate (Illustration 1d, top entry) indicates (Irrotulatur termino sancti Michaelis anno 19^{no} rotulo 38^o). The writ was then spindled until the customers came in to account. Meanwhile, Camp had obtained payment of the £20 due to him for Michaelmas term on 10 November 1440, and had consequently handed over the breve de liberate and produced a receipt, acknowledging payment (Illustration 1b). When the customers arrived in Westminster to account, they proffered the breve de liberate and Camp's receipt, which were joined up with the spindled breve de allocate. Once the sum had been allowed, a corresponding entry (Illustration 1d, bottom entry) was made on the dorse of the breve de allocate (Allocatur in compoto Willelmi de Lwnys et Thome Chynnor collectorum parve custume regis in portu civitatis London computancium a 10^o die Maii anno 18^{mo} regis Henrici vj^{ti} usque festum sancti [Michaelis] tunc proxime sequens). All three documents were then sewn together and filed.

Thus we can see that the Writ and Letter system had evolved. In the old system of assignment, a crown warrant had generated an Exchequer writ, issued under the Exchequer seal and attested by the treasurer, ordering an official to pay a named beneficiary and obtain a receipt, normally under the seal of the payee, which would suffice for allocation when the official accounted. Now, the chancery directed the official to pay directly, without making a detour via the treasurer and chamberlains, by issuing a breve de liberate and handing it over to the beneficiary. Simultaneously, it directed the Upper Exchequer to allow the official any funds he had disbursed to the payee by reason of the breve de liberate, by issuing a breve de allocate under the great seal directed to the treasurer and barons which named the patent which was the ultimate warrant for all payments. Once payment was made, the payee handed over the breve de liberate to the official and produced a receipt under his own seal, just as he had done with the Exchequer's writ in the old Writ and Letter system.

Finally, it is to be noted that the use of the Writ and Letter system was not restricted to annuities and other periodic payments, but was utilized whenever a patent letter was the immediate or ultimate warrant for payment. The payment to the Cologne merchant Johan Rosencrans is a case in point. On 28 August 1442, the king's council decided to pay Rosencrans 250 marks for his diplomatic services to the crown, for which he had not yet received anything for the costs he had incurred, much less in the way of remuneration.⁴⁴ On the following day, the chancery issued a corresponding patent letter, which foresaw payment from the customs paid in London by Hanseatic merchants.⁴⁵ On 8 February 1443, a further patent to the same effect had to be issued, since the first had not named a date from which Rosencrans was to be repaid.⁴⁶ On the same day, the chancery issued a breve de liberate to the collectors of the petty customs in London,⁴⁷ and a breve de allocate dormant to the Exchequer.⁴⁸ On 2 April 1443, Rosencrans acknowledged receipt of an initial 100 marks and on 1 May 1443 of a further £100.⁴⁹ With that, the crown's debt was discharged. Thus, a one-time payment was effected by the new Writ and Letter system – because payment was mandated by a patent letter – and not by the Tally system.

C. The whereabouts of the tallies

The whereabouts of the tallies is a murky subject. What is clear is that – once the tally had been struck in the receipt of the Exchequer – one half was handed over to the payee and the counter-tally given to the deputy chamberlains of the Exchequer of Receipt to be put in their chest until picked up by the deputy chamberlains of the Exchequer of Account for comparison with the tally, which – the corresponding sum having been paid – would be returned into the Exchequer by the accountant.⁹

What happened then is, given the taciturn nature of the records, maddeningly difficult to determine with confidence. While Willard¹⁰ thinks that the auditor matched tallies and counter-tallies and the plenary session of the Exchequer accepted unquestioningly his report of which tallies were ‘in the treasury’, Broome presents two cases from 30 Edw. III¹¹ and 19-20 Edw. III¹² which point in a very different direction. Both cases turn on the fact that the Warwick chamberlain failed to turn up when called before a plenary session of the Exchequer in order to open the chest where the counter-tallies were stored, so that accounting was delayed. It is clear in the case from 20 Edw. III that during a full session of the Exchequer (sedentibus ... thesaurario et baronibus et omnibus aliis ministris hujus scaccarii) the accountant, the sheriff of Norfolk and Suffolk, was presenting for allocation not merely tallies struck in the Lower Exchequer in receipt of cash paid in, but also tallies accepted from payees (petente allocacionem de diversis pecuniarum summis per ipsum solutis ad receptam scaccarii et a l i u n d e per diversas tallias, quas tunc exhibuit, allocandas).¹³ The case from 30 Edw. III makes it clear that it was the chamberlains' task to take custody of the counter-tallies or appoint an attorney to do so (cum ex antiqua consuetudine hujus scaccarii statutum sit, quod custodia talliarum hic in scaccario fiat per duos camerarios vel eorum attornatos) and to produce them to be matched with the tallies proffered by accountants (vocati sunt duos camerarios hujus scaccarii ad proponendum folia talliarum predictarum jungenda stipitibus earumdem et allocanda, ut est moris).¹⁴ What is confusing is the fact that, in the case from 20 Edw. III, it was the deputy chamberlain of the Exchequer of Account, Henry Eccleshale,¹⁵ who was at fault, and in the case from 30 Edw. III, the Warwick chamberlain, Richard Piriton.¹⁶ In any event, it is clear that tally and counter-tally were matched – not by the auditor, as Willard thought – but by the (deputy) chamberlains of the Upper Exchequer in the course of final accounting before the treasurer and all the barons.

However, in view of the momentous changes which took place regarding the chamberlains and their various deputies in the Exchequer of Account and the Exchequer of Receipt in the fourteenth century,¹⁷ it might be objected that evidence from 1346/47 and 1356/57 is of doubtful relevance to our period. However, the deputy chamberlains of the Exchequer of Account are regularly described in the issue rolls from 1413 onwards as the clerici camerariorum ad folia talliarum custodiendum,¹⁸ and the case transcribed above in II.B demonstrates beyond doubt that the Exchequer of Account expected that the chamberlains would be in a position to produce counter-tallies when required by a plenary session and would take charge of them thereafter, prout officio suo incumbit. It is clear, therefore, that the counter-tallies were no longer in the Exchequer of Receipt, whose officials (John Inwardby and Robert Burton) were only called on to verify that the tallies in question had in fact been levied six years earlier. Finally, Lawrence Squibb, writing in 1642 on the duties of Exchequer officials, states that the counter-tallies were kept in the chest of the deputy chamberlains of the Receipt until such time as the deputy chamberlains of the Exchequer of Account came to fetch them. They were then kept in a room under the Exchequer court until the accountants brought in their tallies, at which point the deputy chamberlains of the Exchequer of Account were required to search out the counter-tallies and join them to the accountants' tallies.¹⁹ It seems reasonable to conclude that Exchequer procedure remained substantially the same between the mid-fourteenth and the mid-seventeenth century.

EXCHEQUER TERMS 1392/93–1462/63

Since various officials of the Exchequer were paid less per diem during vacations than during term, the issue rolls distinguish between the two when recording per diem payments to officials at the end of term.¹ The Exchequer terms emerge from these liberaciones, but they never note a break between Easter and Trinity terms.

INDEX OF PEOPLE AND PLACES

Italian and Spanish names are given in the 'ablative', if this seems to be a reproduction of the Italian or Spanish spelling (Andrea, Beaceo, Roderigo rather than Andreas, Beaceus, Roderigus). The order of the names is phonological, so that, for instance, 'y' is alphabetized as 'i'. I have enclosed information on the origins of Italian and Hansetic merchants (e.g. 'of Cologne', 'Venetian merchant') which is not in the accounts themselves in square brackets. Place names are in small capitals.

INDEX OF SUBJECTS

The index is structured so as to serve as a glossary. Hence, the main entry is under the word as it appears in the sources (zinziber), and a cross-reference leads the reader from the modern English term to the main entry (ginger see zinziber). If a term is in Middle English, the plural form is given; if in Latin, the genitive. More than one reference per page is not noted.

INDEX OF SHIPS BY HOME PORT

For the location of the home ports, see the maps at the end of the index. Needless to say, some home ports are difficult to identify with any confidence (Castelond, Cosyche/Cosive, Harlow, Stanby). In these cases, I decided to err on the side of caution, feeling that it was preferable to leave a home port unlocalized rather than grasp at straws and – most probably – introduce an erroneous place identification into the scholarly literature.

- BERGEN OP ZOOM (Map 4A) Cristofor van Bury (skipper Hayn Dankard)¹ 103

¹ 'Bury' is a scribal error for Barowe or some other variant of the medieval name for Bergen op Zoom. The correct identification emerges from the fact that the Christofor de Barewe del Sam (skipper Henricus Dancart, 40 tonnes) was taken into royal service between 24 Feb. 1441

² This is obviously an English ship, but its home port is entirely obscure. It is just barely conceivable that it is to be identified with Castle Hill in Norwich: Karl Inge Sandred, Bengt Lindström, The Place-Names of Norfolk. Part I: The Place-Names of the City of Norfolk (English Place-Name Society 61), 1989, p. 23, but no further evidence can be adduced.

³ Since the skipper of this vessel is clearly Dutch, one must suspect that 'Harlow' is a scribal error, possibly for 'Harlem'. However, no such variant spelling for Harlem can be found in the published Dutch records. Nonetheless, one can firmly reject an identification with Harlow (Essex) and Harlow (part of Harrogate, West Yorkshire).

⁵ Thorphith is reasonably well-attested as a place in Suffolk (CPR 1408-13, p. 271; CPR 1452-61, p. 269) and probably lay in Samford hundred (CCR 1422-9, p. 291). Three aliens were dwelling there in 1436 (CPR1429-36, p. 576), and it was the home port of the Kateryn de Thorpehight, skipper William Galkehorne (TNA: PRO, E122/73/26 f. 25^v). However, while Suffolk had a number of localities with the place-name element 'Thorp' (the parish of Thorpe TM 201623, Thorpe Morieux TL 943533; the manor of Goodrich Thorp TM 130690, Ixworth Thorpe TL 918725, Thorpness TM 474598 and Westhorpe TM 044692), none of them lie in Samford hundred. Consequently, it would be foolhardy to press the meagre evidence for the exact location of Thorphith too far.
